PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 111th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE—Wednesday, February 25, 2009

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable TOM UDALL, a Senator from the State of New Mexico.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Barry C. Black, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

O Lord, our God, by Your will we came into being, and at Your command, when the right hour is come, we shall one day leave this world. Let Your spirit lead our Senators today. May they increase in self-forgetfulness, in simplicity, in courage, and in trust, so that each day they will approach nearer to Your likeness. Lord, help them to offer themselves afresh to be used in Your service. Show them Your way and may they obey Your presence. Give wisdom to the perplexed, fresh vigor to the discouraged, and a clearer vision to all who seek Your will.

We pray in Your sacred Name. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable TOM UDALL led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, February 25, 2009.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable TOM UDALL, a Senator from the State of New Mexico, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, following leader remarks, if any, the Senate will resume consideration of S. 160, the District of Columbia House Voting Rights Act. Rollcall votes are expected to occur today and tomorrow in an effort to advance this bill to passage this week so we can turn to the consideration of the omnibus appropriations bill next week.

Mr. President, you will note that we have had no morning business. The reason for that is we are very in tune to finish this legislation. I want everyone to have ample opportunity to offer any amendment that they want on this bill. There should be no excuse. We have got all morning, all afternoon, all evening, all day tomorrow, but we are going to finish the bill one way or the other.

I hope we can do it the right way, the easy way, so we do not have to file cloture on it. This is a bill that should advance. Senator LIEBERMAN is so knowledgeable about Senate procedures that he will protect everyone's rights. But we cannot imagine what the amendments are going to be; they have to be offered. We have heard a lot of talk about amendments being offered, some germane, some not germane. But let's get it done and move on.

I do not want to have to file cloture on this bill. There is no reason to file cloture. If people have amendments, they want to improve the legislation, let them offer the amendments. But if we do not have a lot of activity on this legislation, I will file cloture today for a Friday cloture vote. If we are unable to complete action on the bill tomorrow, Senators should be prepared to vote on Friday, even though it was previously announced that there would be no votes on that day. So everyone should be alerted that we may have votes on Friday.

There is no reason in the world that this simple piece of legislation cannot be completed. I am surprised we have to go into this tomorrow, quite frankly. We should finish it today—that would also be good—and we could do our work that we have scheduled for the weekend, and we could move this bill so we can start on that on Friday, because, as I said yesterday, we have to complete action on the omnibus spending bill by next Friday, the reason being that the continuing resolution runs out at that time.

Senator COCHRAN and Senator INOUE have worked hard to get the bill to this point. It has been available for everyone for days now. It is on our Web site. Everyone can read every word of it. All of the so-called earmarks, the congressionally directed spending are there. We can look at them, know who asked for them.

The earmarks are down by 50 percent from what they were. The amount of dollars in earmarks, congressionally directed spending, is way down from 4 percent to 1 percent. So let's move forward on the legislation we are dealing with here today and get this done as quickly as possible.

Because this is a 6-week work period, we have a lot of work to do. Some of us were out late last night at President Obama's speech.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA HOUSE VOTING RIGHTS ACT OF 2009

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of S. 160, which the clerk will report by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 160) to provide the District of Columbia a voting seat and the State of Utah an additional seat in the House of Representatives.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I thank the Chair. I thank the majority leader for his statement on this bill, S. 160, the DC House Voting Rights Act. I think he got right to the point. This measure has been before Congress for quite a long time. The bill before us is the result of a bipartisan compromise that was worked out in the House of Representatives last year between Delegate NORTON and then-Congressman Tom Davis.

There are questions about the bill. Obviously, there are different points of view. I am very grateful that yesterday 62 Members of this body, including 8 Republicans, voted to stop a filibuster to invoke cloture to get to this bill. I think people are ready to debate it on its merits.

I feel very strongly that this bill rights a historic injustice. It is hard to believe, when you stop to think about it; maybe we become accustomed to things and forget how unacceptable they are and how unaccustomed we should be, but 600,000 Americans are deprived of having voting representation in the Congress of the United States because they happen to live, of all places, in the capital of this greatest democracy in the world.

There are a lot of historic reasons for this originally, but then they became political reasons, frankly partisan. But none of them holds any real sway against the ideal that animates our country. This is a representative democracy. And finally the residents of the District got a delegate in the House, but the delegate cannot vote.

Think of it. If any one of us, the 100 of us who are privileged to be Senators were told for some reason that we could be Senators, we could represent our States, we could participate in debates, but then when the roll was called, we could not vote—it is unbelievable. This is what we have done to the 600,000 residents of the District of Columbia and to their Delegate in the House.

This bill would right that wrong. I would say that few, if any, of our colleagues would argue that somehow the status quo is acceptable; that is, that 600,000 people do not have a voting representative in Congress.

We are the only democracy—and, of course, we believe we are the greatest democracy in the world. Historically, we began the moment of democracy throughout the world. We are the only democracy in the world where the residents of our capital do not have any voting representation in Congress.

So I think, generally speaking, Members of the Senate understand and accept the injustice of the status quo. The objections are primarily constitutional as I have heard them. I believe the arguments on behalf of the constitutionality of this proposal are strong and convincing, certainly to me.

My cosponsor of this legislation, the distinguished Senator from Utah, ORRIN HATCH, who has, generally speaking, been acknowledged as a wonderful lawyer, a great constitutional scholar, in fact, has written an essay for the Harvard Law Journal, making the case for the constitutionality of this proposal. I commend that to all of our colleagues, particularly those who have doubts about the constitutionality of this measure.

But I honestly think that most people have accepted the injustice question. The constitutionality, okay, let's have some amendments. As Senator REID said, we have got today, tomorrow. We are here. Let's have some amendments and put it in issue, give the Senate the choice that deals with the constitutionality. Some think there ought to be a constitutional amendment to achieve voting representation in the Congress. I do not think that is necessary.

Some think the District of Columbia, the residents should, for purposes of representation in Congress, become part of Maryland or Virginia. There is some historical precedent for that argument, way back. Let's debate it. But let's get it done. This measure has strong support and it has the urgency of justice delayed about it.

So the question before the Senate, as it so often is, are we going to face the differences here and debate them and then have a vote so we can conclude this debate and go back to our States Thursday evening and have a good weekend with our constituents at home or are we going to delay this and use this as a vehicle for unrelated matters that will achieve nothing? That, as usual, is the challenge before us.

I am here, and I look forward to colleagues coming as soon as possible to speak, and hopefully to offer amendments, with the goal that Senator REID has set—we can finish this goal by tomorrow, Thursday. Senator REID has made it clear that if he gets the sense during the day today that there is going to be delay, and there are amendments that are not relevant to the bill, he is going to file cloture. That will mean we will have to stay here on Friday to vote on cloture, and we will not be able to finish this bill presumably until the first part of next week. I hope that does not happen. Please come to the floor and let's talk about it.

I do want to, while I have a moment—I am sure Members are rushing from their offices right now to come to the floor to offer amendments—I do want to talk for the record about the interesting compromise that Delegate NORTON and Congressman Davis achieved last year, and this answers the question of: Why Utah?

This bill would increase the size of the House of Representatives to 437, adding two new Members to the House. This is quite historic both in terms of righting the injustice suffered for now more than two centuries by the residents of our Nation's capital, but also that we are adding Members to the House of Representatives. That does not happen too often in our history.

One of those seats would go to the District of Columbia, the other as part of the compromise would, for the next 2 years, until the reapportionment of the House that will follow the 2010 census, go to Utah. I would say to clarify, that after the 2010 census, the District would retain its seat because of the injustice that we are correcting. But the second seat would go to whichever State deserves it; that is, according to the population found in the 2010 census.

So let me explain why Utah now. Utah has had an objection to the outcome of the 2000 census and the Congressional apportionment that followed it. According to the 2000 census, the State of Utah missed out on getting a fourth seat in the House of Representatives by 857 people.

This was a very thin margin of error, particularly when one considers the methodology of the count and the way it uniquely affected Utah. Remember, 857 people short of getting a fourth seat as compared to another State. According to officials of the State of Utah, somewhere between 11,000 and 14,000 members of the Church of Latter-day Saints, Mormons, missionaries living abroad but citizens of the United States, residents of Utah, were not counted. It is true, however, that members of the military who are abroad are counted.

In two separate court cases, the State of Utah argued that the methodology of the count of the census was flawed because government officials, including military personnel, were counted in the census, while other Americans, including the LDS missionaries, were not. Our colleagues in the House had an insight. It was one of those moments of compromise. Perhaps it seems we are combining apples and pears, but—and I will stop the metaphor and not go on to a sweet fruit salad—the fact is, this made a lot of sense. Our colleagues in the House recognized that in these two sets of complaints—the historic one for the District and the one for Utah, more current—there was a potential solution to the longstanding impasse on DC voting rights.

Let's state what is implicit. Over time, I fear people concluded, notwithstanding the justice of the argument made by residents of the District that they deserve voting representation, it is clear, and we must acknowledge what is clear, the registration of voters in the District is overwhelmingly Democratic. So in terms of partisan balance in the House, the feeling, obviously, was that when the District of Columbia gets a voting representative in the House of Representatives, that representative will almost always be Democratic. Utah tends to be Republican, though not totally; there is one Member of the House from Utah today who is a Democrat.

There was another judgment involved, an interesting one which we tend not to think of. If we just added one seat for the District of Columbia, a voting representative, we would end up with 436 Members of the House, an even number, and no constitutional mechanism for breaking a tie. Obviously, presumably a motion that resulted in a tie would fail, but it seems an unsatisfactory resolution to the problem. Without an odd number of Members of the House, gridlock would ensue in too many cases. How would the House, for instance, organize itself if the split between the political parties was even? Clearly, the Vice President does not serve as a tie-breaking vote for the House, as is the case in the Senate. It could be impossible to elect a Speaker or appoint committee chairs. So the solution devised by our colleagues in the House in the last session of Congress increased the size of the House by two Members to 437, which pairs a new seat for the District of Columbia with a new seat for Utah. That simultaneously gives the District the representation it deserves, keeps the House as an uneven number of seats, and balances a likely Democratic seat from the District with a likely Republican seat from Utah.

This is the balance that resulted in the legislation that is before us. It is a compromise but, as in so many cases—and it is a pragmatic compromise—it results in a good solution, frankly, to two problems, one longstanding for the District, the other more current and brief for Utah.

In submitting this legislation from the committee, we are not judging the manner in which the 2000 census was conducted or the outcome of legal disputes that followed. That is a matter of record. However, it is a statistical fact that Utah was the next State in line to receive an additional seat in the House of Representatives. Given that fact, it is a reasonable bipartisan compromise to create the two voting seats proposed in S. 160. I stress, again, that Utah only receives this seat under this bill for 2 years. The bill has no impact on the conduct of the next census in 2010 and subsequent reapportionment. Once reapportionment is conducted for the 2012 election, the Utah seat will be awarded based on population increases to the State that thereby has earned it. It could be Utah. It could be another State. If Utah's 2010 population does not entitle the State to a fourth congressional seat, it will not retain the seat it will receive under this bill.

The bill offers an opportunity to right the wrong Utah believes it suffered in 2000, the closeness of its numbers and also the fact that Mormon missionaries, way beyond the 857 gap between Utah and the State that got the additional seat, way beyond that number, 11,000 to 14,000. I think this is a very fair compromise that ensures, bottom line, every citizen of the country is given the most precious right democracy can provide, the right to vote for someone who can represent him or her with a vote in Congress. When one doesn't have that, as is the case with the District of Columbia, apart from the frustration I described earlier that Delegate NORTON must experience every time the roll is opened in the House, we have the inequity of residents of the District volunteering and being sent to war. Yet the Delegate of the District in the House has no vote on questions of war or peace. We have soldiers returning as veterans, and yet the representative from the District has no vote on the benefits we will confer or not confer on veterans. The residents of the District are not only taxed without representation, which is, as our Founders asserted, a form of tyranny, but they are taxed very heavily. They pay the second highest rate of Federal taxation per capita. Yet they have no voting representation in Congress on the rate of taxation, the manner of taxation or, of course, where the revenue goes.

They are the only governmental entity, outside of a Federal agency, that has to have its budget approved by the Congress. When we are tied up in gridlock and the budget doesn't pass, it means the District of Columbia is in a terrible predicament because it can't get the money it needs to operate. Yet the District has no voting representation on matters of appropriations in Congress. This is the moment to end this antiquity, a profoundly unjust and, frankly, un-America antiquity.

I urge colleagues to come to the Chamber. Let's have some amendments and debate, and let's get this done by tomorrow afternoon.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, in consultation with the managers, the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Arizona, I make a constitutional point of order against this bill on the grounds that it violates article I, section 2, of the Constitution, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the precedent and practices of the Senate, the Chair has no power or authority to pass on such a point of order. The Chair, therefore, under the precedent of the Senate, submits the question to the Senate: Is the point of order well taken?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I understand that now the motion is debatable.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I have a statement on this issue, and I look forward to debating it and a vote at the wishes of the majority and Republican leader on this constitutional point of order.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I appreciate very much that Senator McCAIN came to the floor to raise this point of order. As I said earlier, this is a matter that concerns people. I feel strongly that the measure is constitutional. But this is exactly what we should be debating. I look forward to his arguments and to responding to them.

I thank the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the Homeland Security Committee, through whose committee this legislation is proceeding.

I appreciate the frustration felt by the residents of the District of Columbia at the absence of a vote in Congress. I fully understand and appreciate that. I also believe it is important that we look back at both the Constitution itself and the intention of our Founding Fathers, which was to create the District of Columbia as a base of Government.

According to many experts, the District of Columbia is not a State, so therefore is not entitled to that representation. Also, one has to raise the obvious question: If the District of Columbia is entitled to a Representative in the U.S. House of Representatives, then why isn't it also entitled to two Senators? If the District of Columbia is entitled to a Member of Congress, why isn't Puerto Rico, which would probably entail 9 or 10 Members of Congress? Why are other territories of the United States not entitled to full-fledged Members of the U.S. House of Representatives and, indeed, the U.S. Senate?

After great deliberation and debate, our Founding Fathers enshrined in the Constitution, 222 years ago, a unique form of government that proposes a distribution of power and checks and balances on each branch. So, too, the Founding Fathers considered and provided for a unique Federal city to serve as our Nation's seat of government. No single Member would represent the interest of the District but all Members of Congress would share responsibility for the city's well-being. I believe that when you look at distribution of tax revenues and when you look at other measurements, the District of Columbia has been well represented by all Members of Congress.

The Framers specifically limited voting representation in the House of Representatives to States. Article I, section 2, of the Constitution provides unequivocally:

The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the People of the several States.

If they had wanted the District of Columbia to have the representation, they would have designated so in the Constitution. Asked to opine on the meaning of the word "States" in the context of House representation, Federal courts have consistently accorded that word its plain meaning, concluding that the word "States" does not include territories or possessions or even the District of Columbia.

Again, I express my sympathy for the residents of the District of Columbia. But to now act in direct contravention to the intent and words of our Founding Fathers, I believe, is a violation of the Constitution of the United States. And to somehow work a deal that includes the State of Utah having an additional seat in return for that is an incredible violation. I will talk more about that.

First, I wish to say that it is very clear the Congress simply cannot amend the Constitution by legislation—no matter how noble the cause. Congress has once before pursued an appropriate constitutional resolution to this issue. In 1978, Congress passed a joint resolution proposing to amend the Constitution to provide for the representation for the District of Columbia in Congress. Seven years later, that resolution failed to obtain the required approval of the 38 States necessary for ratification under article V of the Constitution. There is no reason proponents of voting rights for the District can't pursue this process again. There is a process for amending the Constitution of the United States. There is no reason why those residents of the District of Columbia, and other supporters, should not pursue the legitimate process of amending the Constitution of the United States. It should not be done and, in my view, cannot be done. The courts will decide, if we don't decide here, that it is unconstitutional to do so. I welcome such a process, rather than the consideration of this bill, which is clearly unconstitutional—not only in my judgment but in the overwhelming body of legal opinion.

In addition to being unconstitutional, as I said, I am concerned that this bill is more a product of politics than of principle. Look at what this legislation before us does. It doesn't simply grant the District of Columbia a voting seat in the House; it adds another congressional seat for the State of Utah. The obvious question is, Why Utah? Why not Arizona or Nevada or New Jersey? As a representative of the people of the State of Arizona, who, I believe, legitimately and continuously, as one of the fastest growing States, have been deprived of additional seats because of the way the census was conducted—and now we are going to give a seat to the State of Utah on the grounds that the census was not accurate. I don't know of any fast-growing State in America that doesn't believe we were undercounted—and legitimately—in the census.

Now, as I understand it—and maybe the proponents of an additional seat for Utah can more eloquently and convincingly describe it than I can—they are saying it is because they came closest in the census to being eligible for another seat in the Congress. The State of Nevada is the fastest growing State in America. Arizona has been among those that are fast growing. But why Utah? What in the world does an additional seat for Utah have to do with representation for the District of Columbia? It can only be interpreted in one way, and that is an attempt to buy votes. We are talking about the Constitution of the United States here, about representation in the Congress of the United States of America, not some political deal.

I have sympathy for the State of Utah if they think they were undercounted in the census. I have sympathy for all States that were undercounted in the census. What some supporters of the bill argue is that Utah is the next State in line to receive a House seat after the last census in 2000 and reapportionment. Nevada was the fastest growing State from 1986 to 2004, until Arizona overtook Nevada as the fastest growing State in 2006, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. Nevada, once again, regained this title for its high growth between 2006 and 2007. For the first time in over 25 years, Utah was listed this year as the fastest growing State, as its population climbed 2.5 percent, with Arizona being second, with a population growth of 2.3 percent. Despite this percentage growth, Texas, California, North Carolina, and Georgia added more people than Utah, Nevada, or Arizona between 2007 and 2008. Mr. President, we are getting on a slippery slope here. Do you judge it by percentage of growth, numbers of votes?

It brings us back to a final question: What in the world would awarding an additional seat to another State have to do with voting rights for the District of Columbia?

I have provided those statistics to illustrate there are other States that have experienced far more phenomenal growth than Utah. I love Utah. It is a wonderful State. But the wheels were greased for Utah to receive an additional seat well before it was listed as the fastest growing State this year. And if the State of Utah or any other State was undercounted, that should be taken into consideration; we should fix the census in the year 2010 and make sure any injustice is corrected. But to somehow say we are going to award a State an additional seat not in keeping with the process of how reapportionment is conducted every 10 years is remarkable and certainly unconstitutional.

In 2004, lawmakers began floating an idea of a compromise bill to balance a House seat for the District of Columbia, which obviously we assume would be won by a Democrat, with a seat for a congressional district in Utah, which most assume would be won by a Republican. The May 3, 2005, editorial in the Washington Post called this a "win-win situation." While this may be a win-win situation for Washington, DC, and Utah, it is hardly a win for the millions of Americans who are living in high-growth States.

In fact, according to a report by the Congressional Research Service, if the District was considered to be a State during the last apportionment, North Carolina would not have gained a seat. According to a study by the Republican policy committee, if this bill is enacted and the House of Representatives is expanded to 437 seats, then New Jersey would keep a congressional seat it would otherwise lose. Again, this illustrates there are winners and losers in an apportionment, but these districts should be chosen based on concrete data from the census, not by political parties attempting to craft legislation that flies in the face of our Founding Fathers' intentions.

In a February 6, 2009, editorial, the Los Angeles Times states:

This is obviously partisan horse-trading.

The Los Angeles Times is right. Yes, partisan horse trading happens all the time, but this time partisan horse trading would do grave violence to our Constitution.

A commentator wrote in the February 13, 2009, edition of the Washington Times:

... the enactment of blatantly unconstitutional legislation to bypass the constitutional amendment process and give the District of Columbia a seat in the House of Representatives in a crass triumph of raw political power over the rule of law.

I couldn't agree more.

Again, I regret I am unable to support this legislation to provide the residents of the District voting representation in the House of Representatives. However, I took a solemn oath to defend our Constitution as a U.S. Senator. In testifying before the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee in 2007, Professor Jonathan Turley described this horse trading as "the most premeditated unconstitutional act by Congress in decades."

We, as Senators, cannot avoid the constitutional issue. While the Supreme Court may be the final arbiter of constitutionality, Congress, as the first branch of Government, has an independent duty to consider the constitutionality of the bills we pass, especially where, as here, our own independent Congressional Research Service advises that "although not beyond question, it would appear likely that the Congress does not have authority to grant voting representation in the House of Representatives to the District of Columbia" as contemplated by this bill.

We really have two aspects of this legislation. First of all, does Congress have the constitutional authority to grant voting rights or an additional seat in the House of Representatives by legislation rather than amending the Constitution of the United States?

As I pointed out earlier in my statement, the fact is, it was tried in 1978 in the proper fashion and did not receive the approval of the 38 States necessary to amend the Constitution. So now we are trying to basically amend the Constitution of the United States by legislation. That is not in keeping with the authority and responsibility of the Congress of the United States of America.

The second is, of course, what in the world does granting voting rights to the District of Columbia have to do with granting another seat to another State? One can only interpret that, as one of the editorials did, as political horse trading. There is no constitutional basis for granting a seat to any State in the United States of America without it being backed up, as laid out by our Founding Fathers, by the results of a census.

I will agree, as I have said before, coming from a State that has been consistently undercounted in our population, the census needs to be fixed to more accurately reflect the true population of every State in America, and that has not happened with the fastest growing States. But to grant a seat to a State because they were "fastest growing" and maybe closest to the requirement for an additional seat turns everything on its head.

What kind of a precedent would we be setting by legislation allowing a State to have another seat in the U.S. House of Representatives, with thousands of votes that would be taken?

I also would like to mention, again, if the District of Columbia deserves a voting representative in the U.S. House of Representatives, doesn't the District of Columbia also deserve two U.S. Senators? How intellectually do you make the argument they deserve a vote in the other body, a coequal body—although we certainly do not recognize that very often. But the fact is, it is a coequal body. They are going to have a vote over there, but they are not going to have representation over here.

Finally, I would like to point out that we have territories in which citizens of the United States reside. Those who were born in those territories, according to a U.S. Supreme Court decision, are citizens of the United States. In fact, they are even eligible to run for President of the United States if they are born in a U.S. territory.

What about Puerto Rico? What about the Virgin Islands? What about the Marianas? What about other territories that are part of the United States of America and in which our citizens also reside who then vote for Representatives in the other body, but those Representatives obviously do not have voting power?

I conclude by saying this is a serious issue. It is a serious issue. It has been clouded by the understandable concern that Members of Congress have for the people who reside in the District of Columbia. We see their license plates every day: "Taxation without Representation." But the way to give them those voting rights is through amending the Constitution of the United States, not a legislative act that clearly is not within the constitutional authority granted by our Founding Fathers to the Congress of the United States.

I look forward to a spirited debate on this issue. I think it is an important one. If this DC voting rights bill does pass and this constitutional point of order is rejected by a majority of the Senate, I have very little doubt that the courts of the United States of America will reject this proposal.

Again, I appreciate and admire and respect the manager of this bill, the distinguished chairman of the Homeland Security Committee, and the senior ranking member, the Senator from Maine. But I think there is a huge credibility problem when you add on a provision for adding a seat to a State for which there is not any factual or, frankly, rational argument for except that perhaps this measure will gain more support.

I urge my colleagues to take a very close look at what we are doing. The most sacred obligation we have is to respect and preserve the Constitution of the United States of America in everything we do. I have very little doubt this legislation before us violates the Constitution of the United States of America.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENNET). The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Arizona for his kind words and also for the serious constitutional questions he raised.

As I said earlier, this is exactly what we ought to be debating on this bill. I take it as a given that neither he nor anyone else I heard speak in this Chamber would say that it is fair or just or consistent with the first principles of our representative democracy, this great Republic of ours, that 600,000 Americans be denied the fundamental right to be represented in Congress by somebody who can actually vote. Pretty much everybody will agree that is wrong, all the more unacceptable because these 600,000 people happen to live in the Capital of this great democracy of ours.

The question is, in one sense, the constitutionality of S. 160, the House District Voting Rights Act that is before us, and in a second sense, which the Senator from Arizona has raised, the wisdom, if you will, of combining the voting rights for residents of the District with an extra seat, in the short run, for the State of Utah. I wish to take some time to respond to these serious arguments.

As I understand it—and I think I do—what the Senator from Arizona and other opponents of the constitutionality of this bill say is that the question of the District of Columbia's voting rights in the House should be settled by section 2 of article I of our Constitution, which says the House shall be made up of Members chosen "by the People of the several States." And they argue that because the District of Columbia is not a State, its residents cannot have representation in the House, presumably at least not without a constitutional amendment.

Those of us who feel strongly that this measure before the Senate is constitutional base our claim on the District clause of the Constitution which states that the Congress has the power "To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District," referring, of course, to the Federal District that was created at the time of the Constitution as the National Capital.

Our courts have described in the centuries since this authority in the District clause as a "unique and sovereign power" and "sweeping and inclusive in its character." Unlike many congressional powers, it is not balanced against the countervailing rights of the States.

As former, I believe he was Associate Attorney General, maybe Deputy Attorney General during the previous administration, the Bush administration, Viet Dinh, stated in his testimony before the House of Representatives on this matter:

[W]hen Congress acts pursuant to the District Clause, it acts as a legislature of national character, exercising "complete legislative control as contrasted with the limited power of a state legislature, on the one hand, and as contrasted with the limited sovereignty which Congress exercises within the boundaries of the states, on the other."

That is a very interesting argument about the unique powers of Congress pursuant to this District clause.

Then Mr. Viet Dinh concludes in support of this legislation and the constitutionality of this legislation:

In few, if any, other areas does the Constitution grant any broader authority for Congress to legislate.

That is what we are doing here.

Those who question the constitutionality of the legislation, as I mentioned, rely on section 2 of article I. They rely uniquely and almost totally on the word "States," that the Members of the House shall be chosen by "the People of the several States." So they say the District of Columbia is not a State; therefore, without amending the Constitution, we, in Congress, even under the powerful District clause, do not have the power to grant voting rights in Congress to the Representative of the District of Columbia.

But there is a very clear and powerful line of Supreme Court cases in which the High Court and other courts have upheld Congress's right to treat the District of Columbia as a State and to treat it as a State for matters that are extremely consequential: for Federal taxation; in other words, the right to tax residents of the States might free the residents of the District from this obligation.

Yet the courts have said the District itself can be treated as a State for purposes of Federal taxation, for purposes of Federal court jurisdiction. This was the question of diversity of jurisdiction. I don't have to go into the details. The courts have said it would be an anomaly to say because you happen to be an American living in the District, you cannot gain access to the Federal courts because the Constitution says the various States with regard to diversity and jurisdiction. The same with the right to a jury trial and, very powerfully, the same with regard to interstate commerce. There it is interstate commerce. We have the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution which has given birth to probably thousands of pieces of legislation, a very active role of oversight for the Government. And even though it is the interstate commerce clause, the courts have said very clearly that the District should be considered a State, notwithstanding the literal words in the Constitution. Because effectively, if you don't, you will create an enclave where people can't be taxed, people can't gain access to the Federal courts, people don't have a right to a jury trial, and people can't be protected by generations of legislation and regulation passed pursuant to the interstate commerce clause.

For instance, as long ago as 1805, in the case of Hepburn v. Ellzey, Justice Marshall—the great Justice Marshall—ruled that the District of Columbia could not be considered a State for purposes of diversity jurisdiction under the Constitution, which allows Federal courts to hear disputes between residents of different States. His opinion, nonetheless, remarked on the incongruity of such a result, and Justice Marshall invited Congress to find a solution. Many years later—unfortunately, many years later—Congress did so, and in 1949 the Supreme Court, in the Tidewater case, upheld a congressional statute that said the District should be treated as a State for purposes of diversity jurisdiction.

Citing such cases, former Federal Circuit Court Judge Patricia Wald has testified—and again she testified on behalf of this legislation and its constitutionality:

The rationale of the courts in all these cases has been that Congress, under the District Clause, has the power to impose on District residents similar obligations and to grant similar rights as the States claim power to do under the Constitution itself.

So Congress is saying because the States get certain powers from the Constitution, if we don't treat the District as a State, its residents will be deprived of protections, or the Federal Government will be deprived of the right to tax them, for instance. And Judge Wald continued:

Given that the District is in reality what I might call a City-State of 600,000 people—

Where the population, as I indicated in my opening statement yesterday morning, is just about equal to or greater than four States—engaged in a multitude of private businesses and occupations, there is realistically no other way that a federalist union can do business under the Constitution.

It is also true that Congress has already extended the right of Federal representation, voting representation in Congress, to those who are not citizens of any State. I know this is an unusual statement and an exception, but there is the Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Voting Act. And in that, Congress authorized American citizens overseas to continue to vote for Members of Congress in their last domestic State of residence, regardless of whether they had been citizens of that State and no matter how long they stay overseas. Indeed, as I mentioned yesterday, these people would lose this unusual right to voting representation here in Congress, in States they no longer reside in—and they may not have been there in quite a while—by absentee ballot from elsewhere in the world, only if they renounced their American citizenship or they returned to the United States and came to live in the District of Columbia. Now, that is an anomalous and unacceptable result. Citizens of Federal enclaves within a State are also free to vote in Federal elections held by the State—a right upheld by the Supreme Court.

Notably, Congress has already used this vast authority that I have referred to under the District clause to extend voting rights to residents of the District of Columbia. Between 1789 and 1800, Congress, acting under the District clause, granted residents of the new District—the Nation's capital—the right to vote in their former States of Maryland and Virginia, even though they were actually no longer residents of those States—the land having been formally ceded to the Federal Government to form the new capital district.

Let me now address a few of the other arguments that have been raised by Members, constitutional arguments that have been raised by those who oppose the bill on constitutional grounds.

It has been argued that because the constitutional amendment XXIII was required to grant the District Presidential electors in the electoral college, likewise a constitutional amendment should be required to provide the District with voting representation in the House. But these two issues are distinct. The XXIII amendment worked a fundamental change to the electoral college under Article II of the Constitution. As such, Congress could not legislate with the same latitude it has within Article I, where the District clause is found along with the clause governing composition of the U.S. House.

Some opponents of our proposal also cite the 1990 case of Adams v. Clinton to argue that it would be unconstitutional to grant DC citizens voting rights in the House. That is not the case, in my opinion. In Adams, the DC Government and residents brought a case alleging it was a denial of their constitutional rights to exclude them from representation in Congress. The majority opinion of the three-judge court stated, "We are not blind to the inequity of the situation plaintiffs seek to change," but concluded that the court itself could not grant the District residents voting rights in Congress as a matter of constitutional right. But the court did not address whether Congress was empowered to provide voting rights through exercise of the District clause.

As former Solicitor General and Federal Circuit Court Judge Kenneth Starr testified before the House in 2004 on legislation similar to the one before us now, S. 160:

While the Constitution may not affirmatively grant the District's residents the right to vote in congressional elections, the Constitution does affirmatively grant Congress plenary power to govern the District's affairs.

In fact, the majority opinion in Adams arguably invited such an approach by stating that for plaintiffs to obtain Federal representation, "they must plead their cause in other venues." And presumably that meant the Congress.

Another concern raised by opponents of the bill is that it is a slippery slope, as the Senator from Arizona said. If Congress has the authority to grant the District a voting representative in the House, what is to stop it from adding two Senators or extending full voting rights to the U.S. territories? I respectfully suggest that these concerns are unfounded. The legislation before us only addresses DC voting rights in the House, and the legal case for this action and its validity is unique.

First, with respect to the Senate, this bill could not be clearer. In Section 2(a)(2) it states:

The District of Columbia shall not be considered a State for purposes of representation in the United States Senate.

But our colleagues have argued: Could some future Congress, using the arguments used on behalf of this bill, pass similar legislation to give DC full voting rights in the Senate? To me, that is a very debatable argument at best. Even some of the legal experts who support this bill believe a different and much more difficult analysis would apply to a bill regarding Senate representation because of the distinct language and history of the constitutional provisions governing composition of the Senate and the greater emphasis on the States as such.

The territories are also a distinct and different case. Different constitutional provisions provide for the creation of the District and the Federal territories. The District enjoys a unique legal and historical status, and one that largely mirrors the rights and responsibilities of the States. Its residents pay full taxes and face military conscription. The same is not true of the residents of the territories. Amendment XXIII extended the right to vote in Presidential elections to residents of the District but not to residents of the American territories.

As legal expert Richard Bress concluded in testimony on our legislation last session:

Taken together, these differences between the territories and the District render highly unlikely the suggestion that granting voting rights to District residents would lead, as a legal or policy matter, to granting similar privileges to residents of the U.S. territories.

Finally, in his comments, Senator MCCAIN questioned: How do we put together voting rights for the District of Columbia with an extra seat for Utah; isn't this just a pragmatic political agreement? Well, in some sense it is. But in another sense, like so many pragmatic agreements around here—and this is one of the best of them because it is bipartisan—it achieves a just result: Finally, after all these years in which this outrageous anomaly has been allowed to exist, District residents will get voting representation in the House, and it also corrects what I think was an injustice done to the State of Utah in the last census—and which is one that I referred to earlier—when it came just 857 votes short of another seat, but the census did not count what was estimated—or proven in the court case—between 11,000 and 14,000 Mormon missionaries who were clearly residents of Utah but were elsewhere in the world on their years of missionary service.

The truth is that for too long now partisan concerns have stopped Members of Congress from doing what they knew was right, which is to give residents of the District voting rights. And the partisan concerns are understandable, even if they should not have blocked the result. It is a matter of fact that the residents of the District are overwhelmingly registered as members of the Democratic party. So in the normal course, it would be extremely likely that any Member of the House from the District would be voting and organizing with the Democrats. And I suppose if the shoe were on the other foot and this was a largely Republican voting population, to be fair about it, Democrats would probably have a similar feeling.

Last session, acknowledging the inequity of the District's case and the understandable if ultimately unacceptable partisan concerns, two of our colleagues in the House—Delegate ELEANOR HOLMES NORTON of the District and Tom Davis former Republican Congressman from Virginia—tried to work this out. Acknowledging the inequity that I referred to which Utah felt it suffered, and actually went to court on in the last census, a decision was made to put these two together.

There was also an institutional necessity, if I can add to this. It wasn't a kind of apples and oranges—two problems, let's bring them together and have a bipartisan result, because the new Member of the House from Utah is likely to be a member of the Republican Party. If we only added the one seat for the District, the House would have an even number of Members. One can imagine the gridlock that you would not want to see in the House. You could have an equal number of Members of both parties and a failure to organize, failure to be able to select a Speaker, or a failure to be able to organize committees. On a tie vote, there is no one in the House to exercise tie-breaking authority, similar to the Vice President here in the Senate. So legislation could fail as a result of a tie vote, and that is not a good result either. There was that institutional benefit that if you are going to add one, you really should add two to bring the total back to an uneven number and avoid the problems we have talked about.

I do want to make clear that this kind of equitable grant of an additional seat to Utah, based on what happened after the last census, is only for 2 years. Obviously, if we give the District voting rights, it will go on forever, but it is only for 2 years because another census is coming in 2010 and there will be a reapportionment following that census. If Utah is next in line for that extra seat based on population, of course Utah will hold that extra seat. But if there is another State that, based on population, has a greater claim for that extra seat, then they will get it as well.

I am happy to acknowledge that the bill before us is the result of a political compromise, a bipartisan compromise in the House, but I am not embarrassed by it. I do not think it taints the result because the result is so profoundly just in the case of the District, and I believe also just in the case of Utah, and it only lasts for this one time.

I have tried to argue here, No. 1, on the constitutionality of this measure under the District clause; No. 2, that, yes, this is a bipartisan political agreement, but it is done for good reasons, and that does not taint it at all; and No. 3, I would say that in the bill before us there is provision for an expedited appeal to the courts on the constitutionality. We know there are constitutional differences that have been argued by the Senator from Arizona and myself this morning. We assume they will be tested in court. In the interests of efficient functioning of our Government, we provide in this measure for an expedited appeal.

This is not the first time this would happen. The most significant case I remember, and I am sure it is one of many, is the landmark campaign finance reform legislation that bears the name of my friend from Arizona and our friend from Wisconsin, the McCain-Feingold legislation. Some argued vociferously on the floor that it was unconstitutional. So within the legislation, in a way quite similar to what we have done here on this, it was provided that there be an expedited appeal. That was a way of saying, even if you believe this legislation may be unconstitutional, we are a legislative body, we do not know, really. I believe this legislation is constitutional, but ultimately—I feel that very strongly, I said that it is, but the ultimate arbiter of that, of course, is the courts.

So I urge my colleagues who have constitutional questions about this legislation but really want to stop the inequity imposed on the residents of the District, that they do not have voting representation here, to vote for this measure because it contains with it an expedited appeal which will occur on the constitutionality of the legislation.

With that, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I appreciate the comments of the Senator from Connecticut—in particular, his comments at the conclusion of his remarks about the appropriateness of an expedited appeal. We are both very certain of our constitutional judgment on this. We are both lawyers. We each come to a totally different conclusion about what is constitutional or not. Fortunately, we have the courts to resolve the issues. As with previous legislation, we had the good sense to include an expedited appeal to the courts so that the issue can be resolved one way or the other. I would note there is one thing that is needed to effectuate this—to be sure that, as it was in the McCain-Feingold legislation, an appeal can be facilitated by ensuring pro bono counsel can represent plaintiff in the case.

Let me also reference a fact that my colleague from Arizona is usually quick to point out. He likes to say he is unburdened by a law degree. That certainly can be a burden for those of us who have the degree, but what he has argued illustrates not only the sensibility of our Constitution but also his extensive knowledge of it. I always appreciate his point of view on these issues because of his wide-reaching experience which helps us understand the reasons for the constitutional provision. I support the constitutional point of order he has raised because I do deeply believe the action the Senate is being asked to take here is unconstitutional.

The creation of a House seat for the District by legislation rather than constitutional amendment is what is before us here, and we believe that only by constitutional amendment can the additional representation be appropriately granted.

I would like to respond briefly to the comments of my colleague from Connecticut. They are all well stated. They are the arguments in opposition to the proposition. I referred to a couple of them yesterday, but let me refresh those and then discuss one other matter.

The primary argument of the proponents of the bill is to rely on the so-called District clause, which is article I, section 8, clause 17. The District of Columbia Circuit Court actually interpreted this clause in a case called Neild v. District of Columbia in 1940. What the court noted in that case was that the District clause does indeed allow Congress to legislate within the District for “every proper purpose of government” and gives Congress “full and unlimited jurisdiction to provide for the general welfare of citizens within the District of Columbia by any and every act of legislation which it may deem conducive to that end,” subject, of course, to the negative prohibitions of the Constitution.

But proponents argue that because the District clause allows Congress to do things in the District of Columbia that States themselves cannot do, then it must also follow that Congress, with regard—that it must also allow Congress to do things with regard to the District that only States can do. For example, article I, section 10, of the Constitution bars States from doing things such as coining money, entering into treaties, and keeping troops. But none of these restrictions apply to Congress in the exercise of its power to govern the District.

Proponents of this bill argue that it follows from this sweeping power that Congress may also grant District residents the rights of citizenship in a State, including the right to congressional representation. But this argument does not follow. Congress has some powers in the District that are broader than the powers of a State, but this does not mean that every power of a State must also extend to the District. States and the District of Columbia are different under the Constitution, and each has some rights and powers that the other lacks.

I note in this regard that the Senator from Connecticut quoted from an opinion of Justice Marshall in a very early case in which Justice Marshall saw a problem with the commerce clause and, because of his view that the District of Columbia was not equivalent to a State, invited Congress to solve the problem, which, many years later, as the Senator noted, Congress did do. But, of course, what this case stands for is the proposition that Justice Marshall, who was there at the time and well understood the intent of the Framers, appreciated that he could not do it from the bench. He could not say that the District was the same as a State and therefore he had the ability to fix the problem. That had to be done in another way.

There is a big difference between those kinds of problems dealing with adversity jurisdiction or the commerce clause, and so on, and the fundamental status as a political entity, which would change the representation of the House of Representatives. Moreover, it would make no sense, in the same document where the Framers specifically composed the House of Members of the several States and then specifically designated the District of Columbia as something other than a State, that the Framers then forgot to give the District representation in the House. The Framers had the opportunity to provide the District with a Representative in the House but, of course, declined to do so.

The text of the Constitution on this matter is clear. It says Congress shall be composed of Representatives from States and States alone. Here is the exact wording:

The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several states, and the electors in each state shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislature.

No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the age of twenty five years . . . and who shall not . . . be an inhabitant of that state in which he shall be chosen.

And finally:

[E]ach state shall have at least one Representative. When vacancies happen in the Representation from any state, the executive authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.

So any act by Congress purporting to grant a seat in the House of Representatives would contradict this plain text and would be unconstitutional.

My colleague from Connecticut also noted that we have, for Americans residing abroad, enabled them to vote. But, of course, it is tied to their last domestic residence to a State. It is the State to which these votes go. So, even in those situations where there has been a need to accommodate the fact that Americans are not all residing at that moment in a State, we have tied their vote to the State from which they have come.

I mentioned one case, but I would also like to briefly discuss some other cases because judicial precedent has accumulated over the years and strongly supports the point my colleague from Arizona makes with regard to the constitutionality of this legislation.

In Bolling v. Sharpe, the companion case to Brown v. Board of Education, the U.S. Supreme Court expressly recognized that when it came to the application of the fundamental constitutional principles, the District could not be considered to be the same thing as a State. The Bolling petitioners had challenged the constitutionality of racial segregation in the DC public schools. The Court held that such segregation was unconstitutional in the District, but the Bolling Court was very careful to make clear that the District was not equivalent to the States and not subject to the same legal strictures.

Brown v. Board of Education was based on the 14th amendment, which by its own terms applied only to the States. Because the District is not a State, the Bolling Court reasoned differently rules had to apply to this case.

Here is how the Court explained it:

We have this day held that the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment prohibits the states from maintaining racially segregated public schools. The legal problem in the District of Columbia is somewhat different, however. The Fifth Amendment, which is applicable to the District of Columbia, does not contain an equal protection clause, as does the Fourteenth Amendment, which applies only to the states.

So the Court obviously had a dilemma. It went on to reach the same result as in Brown v. Board of Education and strike down racial segregation, but on different grounds. It was careful to emphasize that the law that applies to the District is different because the District is not a State.

Other courts have also emphasized that the District is not a State.

My colleague mentioned Adams v. Clinton. DC residents there argued that they had a constitutional right to elect a Representative to Congress but the three-judge district court, examining the text and the history, determined that the District is not a State under article I, section 1, and therefore the plaintiffs did not have a judicially cognizable right to congressional representation.

In another case from the DC Circuit Court, Michel v. Anderson, the court affirmed the constitutional principle that Congress cannot grant voting rights to citizens of the District. The court considered congressional rule changes that will allow Delegates from the District and U.S. territories the right to vote in committees and even the committee of the whole in the House. Some Members of Congress sued, claiming these rules went too far. Although the District of Columbia Circuit Court upheld the new rules, it noted that the rules passed constitutional muster only because they did not give the essential qualities of representation to the Delegates; namely, according to the court, it was acceptable to allow the Delegates to participate in deliberations and secondary votes—for example, in committees and the committee of the whole—as long as their votes would not be decisive in the final vote on final passage of the bill. There was a reason for that. The bottom line: The District has a voting Representative in the House to the full extent that it can be granted by the Congress short of a constitutional amendment. At that point, for full representation there would need to be a constitutional amendment.

In a similar vein, in United States v. Cohen, then-Judge Scalia explained, again in a DC Circuit Court decision, that the District clause “enables Congress to do many things in the District of Columbia which it has no authority to do in the 50 States.” But Judge Scalia went on to emphasize “[t]hat there has never been any rule law that Congress must treat people in the District of Columbia exactly as people are treated in the various States.”

Finally, in Banner v. United States, the DC Circuit, in a panel that included now-Chief Justice Roberts, rejected a constitutional challenge to congressional legislation that prevents the DC government from imposing a “commuter tax” on people who work in the District but reside in Virginia or Maryland. The Court stated that Congress had broad authority to legislate under the District clause but also noted:

None of this is to say that Congress can legislate for the District without regard to other constitutional constraints.

And of particular relevance to the present debate, the DC Circuit panel stated:

[T]he Constitution denies District residents voting representation in Congress.

These cases are all clear, and they all reach either the same result or are all based upon the same reasoning. The final constitutional argument was also addressed by the Senator from Connecticut. This has to do with the 23rd amendment. Let me discuss that.

When Congress in the past has addressed the District's special status, it has acknowledged that status is dictated by the Constitution, and it recognized that a constitutional amendment was necessary to change the status, as we have just seen. So when Congress sought to give the District a vote in Presidential elections, it passed the 23rd amendment to the Constitution. When Congress dealt with this issue before, it dealt with it correctly. Congress does have the power to grant the District representation in the House if it deems that it is necessary and desirable. But the proper way to do this is through the mechanism that the Framers provided in the Constitution: the amendment process in article V.

Prior to the ratification of the 23rd amendment in 1961, District residents could not choose electors for purposes of choosing the President and Vice President; but because of this amendment, District residents are now able to select electors “equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives in Congress to which the District would be entitled if it were a State, but in no event more than the least populous State.”

Congress thus recognized in the 1960s that it did have the authority under the District clause and without amending the Constitution to allow District residents to choose Presidential electors.

The 23rd amendment to the Constitution itself recognizes that the District is not a State and cannot be treated as one. First, it ensures that the District, even if otherwise entitled by population, may not appoint a number of electors greater than that of the least populous State. As a consequence, even if the District grew enough in population that as a State it would be entitled to three Representatives and two Senators, let's say if a smaller State than was not entitled to three Representatives existed, the District's electors would be limited to a number equal to those of the smaller State.

Even under the 23rd amendment, for the purpose of selecting Presidential electors, the Constitution recognizes that the District is not the same as a State and is not entitled to be represented in the National Government in the same way.

So where does that leave us? What is next were we to pass this constitutional amendment? There has been an argument made, I think, that the proponents of this legislation would perhaps try, for example, to extend this to representation in the Senate as well. My colleague from Connecticut has said: No, there are totally different historical reasons that would not be so. I accept that there are, in fact, historical reasons that would preclude us from doing that. But I would also suggest the very reasons which caused Congress, the political reasons which caused some in Congress to change from the previous position—which has also been a constitutional amendment is required—to a legislative proposal here, would be very likely to occur in the future on this particular issue as well. I think the same thing could occur with respect to representation in territories, such as the Territory of Puerto Rico, for example.

So if, in fact, today we say, no, that could not possibly be because of tradition and the historical understanding, that is not necessarily the case given the fact that we have now at least some in this body who have thrown over the historical tradition and case law and understanding that only by constitutional amendment could the Constitution—could there be an amendment to allow the District representation.

So I am going to urge my colleagues to vote against the resolution. I am going to urge them to vote to sustain the point of order that my colleague from Arizona has made. There is a constitutional issue, and we need to be on record as to what we believe to be the correct decision. If we believe it is constitutional, then there will be an opportunity to express that in this amendment. If we believe it is unconstitutional, we will have the opportunity to express that. Many of us want to express that proposition.

At the end of the day, however, as my friend from Connecticut has pointed out, the ultimate resolution is not going to be what we believe but, rather, what the courts say with respect to the issue. Again, for that reason, it is important to have a workable, expedited procedure for resolution of this issue in the courts. And I am hopeful we can achieve that in the legislation, even should the legislation pass over the objections of those of us who disagree with it.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CASEY.) The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Would the Senator yield for a unanimous consent request?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I so yield without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the distinguished Chairman I be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, the Senate now considers a bill to provide voting rights to citizens of the Nation's Capital city. I am proud to cosponsor the District of Columbia House Voting Rights Act of 2009. This important legislation would end over 200 years of unfair treatment to nearly 600,000 Americans living in the District of Columbia, a population roughly equal to the size of Vermont, and give them a vote in the House of Representatives. Earlier this week, the Senate finally broke through the Republican filibuster of this legislation that stalled its consideration in the last Congress. That filibuster prevented its passage, despite the bipartisan support of 57 Senators, a majority of the Senate. The vote earlier this week to overcome that filibuster is an encouraging step toward guaranteeing all citizens representation in our Government.

Last Congress, President Bush threatened to veto this bill. This time, when the Congress passes this bill, I am confident President Obama, who cosponsored and voted for the bill when serving in this body as a Senator from Illinois, will sign it into law.

I commend Congresswoman ELEANOR HOLMES NORTON and Senator HATCH for having worked out a voting rights bill for the District of Columbia that can and should pass with bipartisan support. The bill we consider today would give the District of Columbia delegate a vote in the House of Representatives. To remove partisan political opposition, it accords Utah an additional vote in the House, as well.

As a young lawyer, Congresswoman NORTON worked for civil rights and voting rights around the country. It is a cruel irony that as the District of Columbia's longtime representative in Congress, she still does not yet have the right to vote. She is a strong voice in Congress, but the citizens living in the Nation's Capital deserve her vote on their behalf to count.

I believe this legislation is within congressional power as provided in the Constitution. This is not a partisan conclusion. Lawyers from across the political spectrum, from Judge Patricia Wald to Kenneth Starr and former Assistant Attorney General Viet Dinh, agree that this action is constitutional. After careful study, we have all concluded that Congress has the constitutional authority to grant voting rights in the House of Representatives to the representative of the citizens of the District of Columbia.

Last Congress, the Judiciary Committee held a hearing on this issue, and heard compelling testimony from constitutional experts that such a bill is constitutional. They highlighted the fact that Congress's greater power to confer statehood on the District certainly encompasses the lesser action to grant District residents voting rights in the House of Representatives.

Moreover, Congress has often treated the District of Columbia as a "State" for a variety of purposes. Congresswoman ELEANOR HOLMES NORTON reminded us that "Congress has not had the slightest difficulty in treating the District as a State, with its laws, its treaties, and for constitutional purposes."

Examples of these actions include a revision of the Judiciary Act of 1789 that broadened Article III diversity jurisdiction to include citizens of the District, even though the Constitution expressly provides that Federal courts may hear cases "between citizens of different States." Congress has also treated the District as a "State" for purposes of congressional power to regulate commerce "among the several States."

The sixteenth amendment, the Federal income tax amendment, grants Congress the power directly to tax incomes "without apportionment among the several States" and that taxing power has been interpreted to apply to residents of the District. The District of Columbia car license plates or tags remind us every day that District residents suffer from "Taxation Without Representation," a battle cry during the founding days of this Republic.

Hundreds of thousands of Americans residing in the District of Columbia are required to pay Federal taxes. In fact, the District of Columbia residents pay the second highest Federal taxes per capita in the Nation, yet residents have no say in how those dollars are spent. We must also remember that many who serve bravely in our armed services come from the District of Columbia. The brave men and women who defend our values and freedoms abroad must also enjoy those same rights here at home.

Opponents of this bill claim that the citizens of the District of Columbia do indeed have representation, that they fall under the jurisdiction of all 100 Senators and 435 Representatives and are sufficiently provided for by Congress. To that argument I say that there is no substitute for direct representation in Congress. How many of us in either party would be willing to go back to our State and say "You do not need your representatives because other States are going to represent you?" I do not believe that would go over well in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Chairman LIEBERMAN knows that would not go over well in his State of Connecticut. I guarantee you that would not go over well in the State of Vermont. Similarly, the citizens of the District of Columbia also deserve the chance to elect a representative who has not only a voice in Congress, but a vote as well.

Over 50 years ago, after overcoming filibusters and obstruction, the Senate rightfully passed the Civil Rights Act in 1957 and the Voting Rights Act in 1965. Let us build on that tradition and extend the reach and resolve of America's representative democracy. I am pleased that we took the first step in overcoming the filibuster of this legislation, and I urge all Senators to support the final passage of this bill without further delay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a vote on the McCain constitutional point of order occur at 2 p.m. today; that the 10 minutes immediately prior to the vote be equally divided and controlled between Senators MCCAIN and myself or our designees; and that no amendments or motions be in order to the constitutional point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Arizona.

AMENDMENT NO. 574

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to consider an amendment at the desk and that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. KYL] proposes an amendment numbered 574.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide for expedited judicial review for Members of Congress)

On page 27, strike line 21 through the end of the bill and insert the following:

SEC. 8. JUDICIAL REVIEW.

(a) SPECIAL RULES FOR ACTIONS BROUGHT ON CONSTITUTIONAL GROUNDS.—If any action is brought to challenge the constitutionality of any provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act, the following rules shall apply:

(1) The action shall be filed in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia and shall be heard by a 3-judge court convened pursuant to section 2284 of title 28, United States Code.

(2) A copy of the complaint shall be delivered promptly to the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate.

(3) A final decision in the action shall be reviewable only by appeal directly to the Supreme Court of the United States. Such appeal shall be taken by the filing of a notice of appeal within 10 days, and the filing of a jurisdictional statement within 30 days, of the entry of the final decision.

(4) It shall be the duty of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia and the Supreme Court of the United States to advance on the docket and to expedite to the greatest possible extent the disposition of the action and appeal.

(b) INTERVENTION BY MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In any action in which the constitutionality of any provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act is challenged (including an action described in subsection (a)), any member of the House of Representatives (including a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress) or the Senate shall have the right to intervene or file legal pleadings or briefs either in support of or opposition to the position of a party to the case regarding the constitutionality of the provision or amendment.

(2) COURT EFFICIENCY.—To avoid duplication of efforts and reduce the burdens placed on the parties to the action, the court in any action described in paragraph (1) may make such orders as it considers necessary, including orders to require intervenors taking similar positions to file joint papers or to be represented by a single attorney at oral argument.

(c) CHALLENGE BY MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.—Any Member of Congress may bring an action, subject to the special rules described in subsection (a), to challenge the constitutionality of any provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I understand this amendment has been cleared on both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I will not object. I just wish to say this amendment is supported not only by myself but the majority leader. It adds language to the bill. It is similar language that was in the so-called McCain-Feingold bill. So we support the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 574) was agreed to.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. KYL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

AMENDMENT NO. 575

(Purpose: To restore Second Amendment rights in the District of Columbia)

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside so I may call up my amendment, which I have sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, the clerk will report.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. ENSIGN], for himself, Mr. VITTER, Mr. COBURN, Mr. DEMINT, Mr. BURR, Mr. WICKER, Mr. THUNE, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. RISCH, Mr. INHOFE, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. ENZI, Mr. CHAMBLISS, Mr. ISAKSON, and Mr. CRAPO, proposes an amendment numbered 575.

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of Amendments.")

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, while we are here debating the constitutional implications of this bill, I want to take this time to discuss a 30-year constitutional injustice happening right here in Washington, DC.

On June 26 of last year, the Supreme Court issued a landmark ruling affirming the second amendment right to bear arms as an individual and constitutionally protected right. In District of Columbia v. Heller, the Court affirmed that the District of Columbia's ban on ownership of handguns was an unconstitutional restriction on that right. Prior to this decision, Washington, DC, had enforced the most prohibitive gun control laws of any city in the nation. Not only did the District prohibit ownership of handguns, it also required that allowed firearms, such as rifles and shotguns, be "unloaded and disassembled" or "bound by a trigger lock."

Millions of Americans were supportive of Mr. Heller, who was simply wishing to excise his constitutional right to protect himself. Recognizing the District's restrictions were not only unreasonable but also unconstitutional, the majority of the Supreme Court held that "the District's ban on handgun possession in the home violates the Second Amendment, as does its prohibition against rendering any lawful firearm in the home operable for the purpose of immediate self-defense."

Despite the Court's ruling in June, the District of Columbia City Council has continued to exact onerous and unconstitutional firearm regulations on law-abiding residents.

In response to the District's obstruction of the text and spirit of the Court's decision, the House of Representatives passed H.R. 6842, the National Capital Security and Safety Act. Last year, almost half this body joined me in a letter to the majority leader urging prompt consideration of this bill, which was denied and the bill died. That bill would have unequivocally restored the Second Amendment rights of the District residents, and that is why I offer this updated bill as an amendment to S. 160 and encourage my Senate colleagues to join me to address this real injustice.

Mr. President, the residents of the District have waited long enough, and it is time for us to ensure that they realize their constitutional right to bear arms. We must pass this amendment so the Second Amendment rights of the citizens of DC are protected.

This amendment is substantively identical to the bipartisan compromise that passed the House last year, with the exception that it repeals the 2008 DC anti-gun law that was enacted in the interim, and the inclusion of a severability clause. As I said, these are merely technical changes to this widely supported bill that 47 of my colleagues supported in a letter to the Democratic leader in the 110th Congress and two of our new Senate colleagues voted for while they were in the House, when it passed by a vote of 266 to 152 including 85 Democrats.

These changes were necessary to guarantee the second amendment rights to DC residents are adequately protected. Instead of abdicating our constitutional duties as a co-equal branch of Government, we should enact legislation such as my amendment, to defend and protect the constitutional rights of American citizens. It is high time we address this real constitutional injustice and adopt my amendment.

Mr. President, it is high time that we address this real constitutional injustice and pass my amendment. According to the Census Bureau, Washington, DC, is the 27th largest city, with close to 600,000 residents. Similarly large cities, however, have not enacted comparably restrictive gun laws. For example, both Las Vegas proper and the District of Columbia are cities with populations between 500,000 and 600,000 residents. According to the Census Bureau, in 2007, Las Vegas without incorporated areas, was the 28th largest city, just behind DC. These cities, however, have very different gun-control laws.

According to FBI Criminal Justice Information Service Division, in 2007, the murder and non-negligent manslaughter rates were higher in DC than Las Vegas, including all the incorporated areas. When you include the incorporated areas, this more than doubles the population count in Las Vegas. In fact, if you total all the population of Nevada, DC still would reigns in this category. Can you honestly tell me gun control in DC has been effective?

According to the FBI, murder rates in the United States peaked at around 10.2 per 100,000 persons in 1980. Despite the strictest gun ban in the country, however, murder rates in the District continued to climb well into the 1980s and 1990s, peaking in 1996 at about 80.6 per 100,000—nearly 8 times the average of what the rest of the United States had experienced.

Since then, the murder rate in DC has declined somewhat and is now fairly level, following a national trend of decreasing violence. As this chart shows, however, the murder rate in DC still remains over 250 percent higher relative to the 48 largest cities in America.

Law-abiding, Nevada residents only need to register handguns if they live in Clark County, the home of Las Vegas. And then, to do so, they simply bring an unloaded handgun to any police substation—unlike the District of Columbia's single location—where they receive a cursory background check and are given a gun registration card. There are no fees or other onerous hurdles to infringe on the Second Amendment rights of law-abiding citizens.

The DC gun registration laws for lawfully permitted firearms are even more restrictive than Nevada laws for concealed-carry permits. Yet, I repeat, even with a gun ban, DC crime rates are significantly higher. Disarming the law-abiding residents of DC has made them easy prey for criminals to target. Furthermore, most criminals who use guns get them through unregulated channels. According to the Bureau of Justice statistics, most criminals get guns via theft or the black market. According to the ATF, almost 90 percent are acquired through unregulated channels, and the median time between a gun's acquisition and its use in a crime is over 6 years.

Mr. President, it is high time we address this real constitutional injustice and let DC citizens lawfully defend themselves. I urge my colleagues to support my amendment to protect the Second Amendment rights of DC residents.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

Ms. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, first, I wish to thank my colleague from Nevada for bringing up this very important issue. Those of us who are strong supporters of second amendment rights clearly are looking at this issue and appreciate his leadership.

Earlier this morning, the Senator from Arizona raised a constitutional point of order as it relates to the bill before us, S. 160. I have to admit, I kind of took a step back and said: Well, a constitutional point of order—I am not sure I am familiar with that. So we went to Riddick's, which is our encyclopedia of Senate precedents, and looked up "constitutional point of order" and some of the history there.

I was surprised to find that a constitutional point of order was raised during the consideration of the Alaska statehood bill.

I have had an opportunity on the floor, throughout this past year, to remind all my colleagues that this year is the 50th anniversary of Alaska's statehood and some of the debate that took place on the floor of the Senate and the process that we as a State took to gain statehood.

I pulled up the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD from this debate on the constitutional point of order. It is quite interesting, quite fascinating, from Alaska's perspective, because the point of order that was being discussed was whether section 10 of the Alaska Statehood Act violated the requirement that States come into the Union on equal footing.

The argument that was made at the time was that half of Alaska's territory would be withdrawn by the federal government, depriving the proposed State of Alaska at the time the power to have a uniform system of taxation. Alaska's experience seeking voting representation in Congress explains why I have taken such great interest in the debate over representation for the District of Columbia.

In Alaska, it was a huge fight—a huge fight—as to whether we should become a State. My grandparents on both sides were involved in the debate at the time. It was a fight to gain control of our resources. It was a fight to determine who had control of our fish. As Alaska observes the 50th anniversary of its admission to statehood I reflect back on our fight for voting representation in Congress. This is why I believe it is so important for the people of Alaska to have voting representation in the House of Representatives.

I appreciate the pleas of the people of the District of Columbia, the residents of this very small area, for voting representation within the Congress because it was not too long ago those same cries were being heard back in Alaska. You have to give the District of Columbia government credit for a pretty effective lobbying campaign. I do not know of any other place that has used their license plates to tell the rest of the country what it is they are asking for: no taxation without representation.

There are significant differences between Alaska's fight for statehood and the cause of representation in the House for Washington, DC. Alaska, 50 years ago, was a territory. The District of Columbia is a different entity, a federal enclave created by our Constitution. Our Constitution makes it clear that they are not a State. However, I supported cloture on the motion to proceed to S. 160 yesterday because I believed it was important that we have this debate on the floor of the Senate and that we hear the perspectives being presented, whether it is from the Senator from Connecticut or the Senators from Arizona, and to allow this issue, which is so important to some 600,000 people, to be debated. I represent a State of just a little over 600,000.

It was back in 1960, June 17, that the Congress approved and sent to the States for ratification the 23rd amendment. It was the 23rd amendment that extended to the people of the District of Columbia representation in the electoral college. It was 285 days later that the 23rd amendment was ratified by the States. That ratification settled the question of whether the people of the District of Columbia should have the right to vote for President, and it settled that question absolutely conclusively, by way of amendment to our U.S. Constitution.

I believe the people of the District of Columbia have been without representation in the Congress for too long. I have strongly supported the view that the people of the District should have voting representation in the House of Representatives, but what we have before us today, S. 160, does not conclusively resolve the question of whether they will.

We know the question of whether Congress may, by legislation, grant the District of Columbia a vote in the House of Representatives has been a matter of spirited debate not only here on this floor but with constitutional scholars on all sides of the issue. It was our assistant majority leader yesterday who observed that S. 160 has attracted—I think the words were some strange bedfellows amongst the community of constitutional scholars. We have very distinguished individuals such as Ken Starr and Viet Dinh who suggest that, in fact, S. 160 is constitutional. On the other side, we have an extremely well-respected gentleman, Jonathan Turley, who has testified that despite the best of motivations, S. 160 is fundamentally flawed on a constitutional level and would only serve to delay true reform for District residents. His conclusion is that this legislation is facially unconstitutional.

We also have a review by our non-partisan Congressional Research Service, their assessment and their analysis, and they, too, cast doubt on the constitutionality of S. 160. Their report, dated February 17, 2009, states:

Although not beyond question, it would appear likely that Congress does not have the authority to grant voting representation in the House of Representatives to the District of Columbia.

So the key point here is this: I believe the District of Columbia deserves representation in the House of Representatives, but S. 160 does not conclusively resolve the question of whether they will get it.

I think we have heard on this floor that this is going to lead to litigation. The issue, of course, is how do we interpret article I, section 2, of the Constitution, which says:

The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen . . . by the people of the several States.

I don't think there is any dispute amongst the constitutional scholars who are out there that the District of Columbia is not a State for the purposes of article I, section 2. If the courts shall conclude that article I, section 2, of the Constitution means what it says—that only the people of the several States can send voting Representatives to the House—then basically we start all over. We start all over. We start anew with a constitutional amendment on DC representation.

So I would suggest to the body that what we are engaging in today is almost a cruel hoax because what we are doing is we are delaying the end of taxation without representation for several more years. What we are doing is getting this into the courts. Is that what the people of the District are really seeking?

I think 49 years ago the Congress understood what we needed to do in order to provide clarity and to conclusively resolve the issue of the District of Columbia with the 23rd amendment. We knew the way to handle it was to give the people of the District of Columbia a voice in the selection of the President and Vice President, and the route they chose to take was the route of a constitutional amendment. They knew then that was the proper route to take, and I would suggest that today it is the proper route to take to provide for this. This Senator believes that is what we owe to the people of the District of Columbia, to get it right the first time. Let's resolve this. A constitutional amendment passed by the Congress, ratified by the States, settles the matter of DC representation conclusively, and S. 160 doesn't.

Now, we know the history on this. This was tried once before. A constitutional amendment was adopted by two-thirds of both bodies and sent to the States for ratification. Unfortunately, only 16 States chose to ratify within that 7-year period. So we basically come back to start over. I would suggest that is the method and manner we need to approach as we try to provide representation for the 600,000 people who are residents of the District of Columbia.

I am prepared to support a constitutional amendment and to work for its ratification, and I intend to introduce that constitutional amendment today. It will not be part of S. 160. A constitutional amendment is a different process, one that is done through joint resolution as opposed to a Senate measure or a House measure. I believe amending our Constitution will provide justice for the people of the District of Columbia, and I look forward to working toward that end.

With that, I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 576 TO AMENDMENT NO. 575

(Purpose: To restore Second Amendment rights in the District of Columbia)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. President, what is the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Amendment 575 offered by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to offer a perfecting second-degree amendment to Senator ENSIGN's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. COBURN] proposes an amendment numbered 576 to amendment No. 575.

Mr. COBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of Amendments.")

Mr. COBURN. Mr. President, this is simply a perfecting amendment to change the date of the actual enactment of this bill.

I ask unanimous consent to speak for a few moments on the underlying bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. COBURN. I will do that for a very short period of time.

We have heard a lot about the constitutionality of this, but I think there is an important point that has not been raised, and I would take exception to the fact that this is not a partisan debate. This is about whether we really follow this wonderful little document each of us in this Chamber has sworn an allegiance to and what it says.

I wish to quote a legal scholar because I think it leads to a lot of common sense. Here is the quote:

It would be ridiculous to suggest that the delegates to the Constitutional Convention or ratification conventions would have worked out such specific and exacting rules for the composition of Congress, only to give the majority of Congress the right to create a new form of voting members from federal enclaves like the District. It would have constituted the realization of the worst fears for many delegates, particularly the Anti-Federalists, to have an open-ended ability of the majority to manipulate the rolls of Congress and to use areas under the exclusive control of the Federal Government as the source for new voting Members.

I have no doubt that if this present bill is passed, it will be found unconstitutional. As my colleague from Alaska stated earlier, if what we want to do is change the Constitution, the way to do that is through a constitutional amendment and a joint resolution.

So there is no question that people who are taxed have the right to representation, but there is another way to solve that. The best way to solve it is to eliminate the tax on the citizens of the District of Columbia. I will be offering an amendment this afternoon that will do just that.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, this is a distressing situation where, for some reason, we have abandoned the knowledge we gained in 1977 that it takes a constitutional amendment to get representation in the Congress for the District of Columbia. There is so much in the Constitution that refers to this, but article I—the very first article—section 2, says the House of Representatives—that is what we are talking about: giving a Member of the House a vote for the District of Columbia—shall be composed of Members "chosen every second year by the people of the several States." It goes on to say that the requirements of a Representative are that they should be—they must be, when elected, "an inhabitant of that state in which he shall be chosen." The Senate—discussed in section 3—of the United States "shall be composed of two Senators from each State."

So I know there is politics here, and I hope when the Supreme Court reads this debate they look right through it because I don't think it is a sound position we are dealing with. I believe Senator MCCAIN has rightly raised a point of order as to the constitutionality of this bill.

I wish to make some general remarks.

I think the legislation is an affront to the Constitution. Professor Jonathan Turley, one of the liberal outstanding scholars of the law, who has testified before our committee a number of times, testified before the House Judiciary Committee recently—this is the language he used, and I am sure he would consider himself a Democrat. He said he considers this bill to be "one of the most premeditated unconstitutional acts by Congress in decades."

Congress cannot, consistent with the Constitution, pass a bill that gives congressional voting rights to a non-state without violating the plain text of the Constitution. The Framers of our Constitution envisioned a Federal city that would not be beholden to any State government. The text of the Constitution does not provide anywhere that a non-state may have a congressional voting Member. Also, the District of Columbia is not a forgotten city. In fact, it receives more Federal dollars, per capita, than any State in the United States.

History is clear that the Framers excluded the District of Columbia from having direct congressional representation. Our Founders could have placed the seat of the Federal Government within a State—and that was discussed—thus ensuring direct congressional representation from that city, but they chose not to do so. As James Madison stated in Federalist No. 43, there was fear that the State that encompassed the Nation's Capital would have too much influence over Congress. It has a lot now. The Framers feared that, symbolically, the honor given to one State would create "an imputation of awe and influence" as compared to other States. That is, that the State would have an advantage in some fashion.

Thus, when the Framers of our Constitution considered carefully how to treat the Nation's Capital, they provided in the District clause—article I, section 8, clause 17, of the Constitution—that Congress had the power to "exercise exclusive Legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such District."

So it gave Congress the legislative power over the District, clearly. Congress was, of course, made up of Representatives from States. This meant that residents of the District would not have direct representation in Congress—they understood that, clearly, from the beginning and, indeed, they have never had it—but instead, they would have indirect representation and that such direct representation was reserved only for the residents of States.

Second, this bill violates the plain text of the Constitution, as I noted. Article 1, section 2 says "each State shall have at least one representative." Further, one of the qualifications to be a Congressman is to "be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen." As George Smith, the former senior counsel at the Department of Justice's Office of Legal Counsel recently wrote and was published: "All told, no fewer than 11 constitutional provisions make it clear that congressional representation is linked inextricably to statehood."

Congress has recognized this fact in years past. In 1977, Congress passed a constitutional amendment, which was never ratified by the States, but we passed it. It was a constitutional amendment that would have given the D.C. residents congressional representation. I suppose that was then and this is now. Now we are just going to pass a law that doesn't have to have a supermajority in Congress or be ratified by the States. That is a lot easier to do. I remind my colleagues that while political winds may change, the plain text of the Constitution doesn't. The Constitution says only States may have congressional representation, and no bill, no mere congressional legislation, no law we pass can change that fact. The Constitution is the supreme law of the land. Our legislation can't alter the constitutional requirements. We can alter the Constitution through the amendment process, as has been previously done, to fix this very problem.

Alexander Hamilton, many years ago, wrote:

The qualifications of the persons who may . . . be chosen, are defined and fixed in the Constitution, and are unalterable by the legislature.

Finally, the District is not, as I said, forgotten. Its residents have indirect representation. All 435 Members of the Congress travel in the traffic here, go in and out of the city, and 100 Senators likewise do the same. They have done pretty well by way of getting money out of the Federal Government.

One of the Framers' concerns, which Madison articulated, was a fear that the "host" State would benefit too much from "the gradual accumulation of public improvements at the stationary residence of the Government." According to the most recent data available, as of 2005, the District of Columbia taxpayers received more in Federal funding per dollar of Federal taxes paid than any of the 50 States. According to the Tax Foundation, for every $1 of Federal tax paid in 2005 by the District of Columbia citizens, they received approximately $5.55 in Federal spending. This ranks the District the highest nationally by a wide margin. For example, New Mexico, which is perceived to be the most benefitted State, received $2.03 in Federal spending per $1 of tax payments their citizens made. But even that amount is $3.52 less than what the citizens of D.C. receive. Perhaps, some would say Madison's fear has become a reality, with all the jobs that are here and paying good wages—how many of us would love to carve out some of these agencies and have them be settled in Birmingham or Baltimore or New York? Then that tax revenue would be spent in our States. But it is being spent here.

I am just saying I don't believe the District of Columbia is being abused. In fact, they are doing pretty well with taxpayers' money all in all. I know the argument that you don't collect property tax on Government property and everything, but they are doing pretty well under any fair analysis.

The Framers envisioned a Federal district serving as the National Government's home. That district was not to be a State, and the District of Columbia was never to be treated as a State. Granting a non-state congressional representation and voting rights in the Congress of the United States violates the Framers' intent, pretty clearly, and the plain language of the Constitution. Congress, as Professor Turley notes, "cannot legislatively amend the Constitution by re-defining a voting member of [the House of Representatives]."

We have all sworn to uphold the Constitution and to defend it. As written, this bill violates the Constitution and it will, I predict, be struck down by the Court. I think it is going to come back from the Court like a rubber ball off that wall. If it doesn't, we are going to learn something about the Supreme Court of the United States—something we don't want to know. I submit that we cannot in good faith vote for this bill without conflicting with our oath to the Constitution. So that is why I cannot support it.

I would just point out a recent case decided November 4, 2005, in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. The panel consisted of now-Chief Justice John Roberts; Judge Harry Edwards, appointed by President Carter; and Judith Rogers, appointed by President Clinton, for whatever that is worth. I hate to even say that because we expect our judges to put away partisan activities when they put their robes on. So that is just background.

Basically, the court dealt with an argument over taxes. As part of their holding—it is a per curiam opinion; no one judge was considered to be the author. They all agreed to this language. They said:

Congress, when it legislates for the District, stands in the same relation to District residents as a state legislature does to the residents of its own State.

So we stand in the same position to the people of D.C., as set up by our Founders, as the State legislatures do to the people of the States. The court also noted:

Not only may statutes of Congress or otherwise national application be applied to the District of Columbia—

That is the tax laws—

but Congress may also exercise all the police and regulatory powers which a state legislature or municipal government would have in legislating for state or local purposes.

Then the court said:

This is true notwithstanding that the Constitution denies District residents voting representation in Congress.

So this panel, in 2005, concluded—all three judges—that the Constitution denies District residents voting representation in Congress.

I am not personally of the view that people who voluntarily live within the borders of the District of Columbia have to have direct congressional representation. I guess it is a matter that we can discuss and debate. Arguments on both sides can be made. I simply say the matter is conclusively decided by the plain language of the Constitution.

As Mr. Smith says, 11 different places in the Constitution say that representation in Congress must come from States. It does not come from districts. It does not come from territories. It does not come from tribal areas. It comes from States.

If we would like to change it, maybe we can, but we are bound by the laws and our Constitution, and a mere statutory act of this Congress is not able to reverse the Constitution. Therefore, I will object to the passage of this legislation. I think it is incorrect. I will support Mr. MCCAIN's constitutional point of order because I see no other rational conclusion.

As shown by a recent opinion from the District Court of the District of Columbia in 2005, the Constitution does not give congressional voting rights to residents of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. HAGAN). The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Madam President, I rise in support of the DC Voting Rights Act. I rise from a new seat, a new chair in the Senate. My desk is now moved to the center aisle. I rise from this desk for the very first time to speak about a new opportunity to expand democracy. That is what the DC Voting Rights Act is—it is about democracy, about fairness, and about empowerment.

The DC Voting Rights Act simply gives the District Representative full voting rights in the U.S. House of Representatives. I also want to point out to my colleagues that this is not only about the District of Columbia, but this is also about Utah. What this legislation does, in a sense of fairness and parity, is grant a seat to the District of Columbia and an additional seat to Utah. What we are doing is trying to adjust, without amending the Constitution, wrongs that need to be righted. The DC Voting Rights Act gives the District Representative full voting rights in the House of Representatives.

Right now, the District of Columbia is represented—and I might add very ably—by Congresswoman ELEANOR HOLMES NORTON, a distinguished public servant. She is called a Delegate to Congress. We call her Congresswoman. When she moves around her great area, she is also called that. What is she allowed to do? One, she is able to have a voice. That is important. So the people of DC do have a voice. But in Congress, a voice also usually means a vote. That is where it doesn't work the way we think it should. She is able to vote in her committee, but she is not able to vote on the House floor. We think that is wrong. We think she should have a voice and we think she should have a vote.

The residents of the District of Columbia are the only residents in a democratic country in the capital city who do not have a vote in determining the fate and direction of the Nation.

What we have essentially done is disempower the over 600,000 residents of the District of Columbia. Yet we do not disempower them when we call them to serve for war. The District of Columbia, through its National Guard, has served ably and willingly. Yet even though they go to fight for the entire United States of America and they are sent to war by the Congress of the United States, they have no voice, no vote in the direction of their own country. This is not right.

DC residents go by the same rules and laws as the United States of America. They pay taxes. They pay, by the way, Federal taxes because they see themselves as part of the Federal Government. But the Federal Government does not see that they have full representation. I wish sometime we could have those DC residents who fought in wars in the balconies. They fought through the National Guard, and they fought through the regular military. They have fought and they have died, most recently in Iraq and Afghanistan. But when they come home, they are treated like second-class citizens. I don't think that is right.

I also happen to believe if you pay taxes—there was a famous patriot who said: If you pay taxes, you should have representation. If it was good enough for Patrick Henry and Patrick Kennedy, it should be good for us. If you pay taxes to the Federal Government, your representative should have a vote in the Congress of the United States. That is what we want to do today.

When we think about all the major issues that are debated in Congress—the economy, health care, education, the direction of our national security—these issues affect the residents of the District of Columbia the same way they affect Maryland or Virginia or Texas or Alabama or North Carolina. Yet the DC residents do not have a vote on these issues.

How would you feel, Madam President, if you did not have anyone representing you on those issues or if your Congresspeople could have a voice but not a vote? I think the District of Columbia deserves this, and they have been waiting a very long time. The District of Columbia has been waiting for this for 200 years.

Last year when we tried, we fell three votes short. But we are in a new day in Washington, and I hope this new day will be new democracy, the expansion of democracy. We love to expand democracy around the world. Let's expand democracy to the District of Columbia.

The District of Columbia has been made the target of congressional pet projects. We often shove ideas at them. We undo what they often want to pass for themselves. We think they should be able to have a vote to exercise the direction both for themselves and for the Nation.

Currently, DC residents are represented by a delegate. This would give full voting power in the House of Representatives. It would give Utah one additional representative. This solution is fair, it is nonpartisan, and it will enfranchise 600,000 District of Columbia residents and also enfranchise the State of Utah to have one additional representative that they barely missed in a census that was flawed in many ways.

I stand today as a friend and neighbor to the people of the District of Columbia. We in Maryland live next door to the District. Many of the constituents I represent, the sons and daughters live in Maryland, the moms and dads continue to live in the District of Columbia. I know their fierce devotion to this country, the fact that they are proud to be residents of the Capital of the United States of America. They love doing their duty by participating in their community, by paying their taxes, and going to war, if necessary. But they believe participation and taxation should have representation. I believe like they do; we should give it to them and give it to them this week in this Senate. The time is now.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CORNYN. Madam President, when we are sworn in to the Senate, we raise our right hand, put our left hand on the Bible, and swear to uphold the Constitution and laws of the United States. That is why I am very troubled and concerned that those of us who have taken that sacred oath to uphold the Constitution would, in fact, purport to violate the Constitution by passage of S. 160, the DC voting rights bill.

This bill, at various times, has been called the DC voting rights bill; at other times it has been called the DC statehood bill. Of course, DC is not a State, but DC would have to be a State under the Constitution to get the voting Member of the Congress for which the proponents of this legislation are calling.

By the way, if DC is a State for the purpose of creating a district for a Member of Congress, why would not DC be a State for the purpose of having two U.S. Senators? Of course, even the proponents of this legislation know that would be a bridge too far, but this is the first incremental step to considering the District of Columbia as a State entitled, they say, to a Member of Congress, as well as two Members of the Senate.

I believe this legislation is unconstitutional. There is a constitutional way to do it, but the proponents of this result have found that to be a tough row to hoe, to pass a constitutional amendment. So now they have come back trying to do it the so-called easy way but in a way that violates the Constitution and, I would say, cannot be reconciled with the oath that each of us takes.

I know it is common to say the courts will fix it. We ourselves have a duty to pass only legislation that we believe is truly constitutional. For us to say we have the votes now, as some of my colleagues have indicated, we have the votes to do it, but let's not pay attention to the constitutionality of it I think is a very serious mistake.

We all sympathize with the desire of the residents of the District of Columbia to be represented in Congress. But as I said, there are constitutional ways to do this, and this legislation is not a constitutional way to accomplish that goal.

I don't know how the constitutional limitation or, indeed, the prohibition to passing this legislation and expecting it to be enforced could be more plain. Of course, the Constitution in article I, section 2, limits House seats to States alone. The District of Columbia is not a State and, therefore, the District of Columbia may not have a House district and be represented by a voting Member of the House of Representatives.

I am not asking anybody to take my word for it. Let's just look at the text of the Constitution.

The text of the Constitution repeatedly and clearly limits representation in the House of Representatives to the States. The apportionment of Representatives is governed by section 2 of the 14th amendment, which provides: "Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States."

As I mentioned a moment ago, article I, section 2, of the Constitution establishes the House of Representatives and governs its membership. Each of that section's first four clauses specifies States—not cities, not the District of Columbia—as those entities that are entitled to representation in the House.

The first clause provides that Representatives are chosen "by the People of the several States."

The second clause provides that a Representative must be "an inhabitant of the State in which he [or she] shall be chosen."

The third clause says that "each State shall have at least one Representative."

The fourth clause specifies that "when vacancies happen in the Representation from any State," the Governor of that State shall call an election.

Article I, section 4, of the U.S. Constitution provides that rules for the elections of House Members "shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof. . . ."

Just as the text of the U.S. Constitution makes plain that only States are to be represented in the House of Representatives, it is equally clear the District of Columbia is not a State for purposes of such representation.

Article I, section 8, of the Constitution specifies that the Federal Government "District," the District of Columbia, was to be formed "by Cession of particular States." This provision distinguishes between States and the Federal District in which we are presently located formed by cession of the States.

If that is not enough—the plain text of the Constitution—then I think all we need to do is look back at the 23rd amendment of the Constitution, where the proponents of this result actually tried to do it the right way. The 23rd amendment to the Constitution, which granted the District of Columbia Presidential electors, gives the District of Columbia the number of electors it would be entitled to if it were a State. This constitutional text presupposes that the District is not a State, as that term is used in the Constitution, for purposes of apportioning Representatives, Senators, and electors.

In short, the text of the Constitution could not be clearer, that Members of Congress are to be elected only from States and that the District of Columbia is not a State.

One may be asking why would we be having this debate 230-something years since this country was founded. It has been understood and, indeed, has been the uninterrupted practice and precedent of our Republic that people have regarded the District of Columbia not as a State and not entitled to a Member of the House. Otherwise, why would this just be coming up now? From the founding until recently, the evidence shows it was understood that a constitutional amendment would be required to give the District a voting seat in Congress. Of course, since the founding, the District has never been granted a voting seat in Congress. Representation has been apportioned in accordance with the constitutional provisions I have cited every 10 years since 1790. In other words, every 10 years we have a census, and every 10 years Congress apportions seats in accordance with these constitutional provisions, every 10 years since 1790. Never in the history of this country has a Congress or a President acted on the belief or on the theory that they had the power somehow to apportion a Representative to the District of Columbia.

Indeed, the Framers of the 23rd amendment clearly thought that granting the District Presidential electors, as I mentioned a moment ago, required a constitutional amendment. Similarly, in 1977, Congress passed a constitutional amendment that would actually have given the District residents what they seek by this act of legislation. At least at that time, the consensus of Congress was a constitutional amendment was required.

If the Framers of the 23rd amendment or the authors of the DC voting rights amendment believed they could have achieved their ends by mere legislation alone without submitting themselves to the admittedly difficult process of constitutional amendment, don't you think they would have done so? Clearly, they would have done so.

Furthermore, the Federal courts have long interpreted the word "State" in section 1 of the 14th amendment to exclude the District of Columbia. Thus, due process, equal protection, and other constitutional challenges to District laws, such as in the recent Heller case—that was the DC gun rights case—are brought under the Bill of Rights rather than the fourteenth amendment that would incorporate the Bill of Rights and apply them to the States.

If the District of Columbia is not a State for purposes of section 1 of the 14th amendment, it seems odd to argue it is a State for purposes of section 2 of the 14th amendment in the very next sentence of the U.S. Constitution.

The history of our first two centuries under our Constitution demonstrates an uninterrupted consensus by all three branches of Government that the District could not be represented in Congress without a constitutional amendment. Why Congress would even consider passing a piece of legislation that is going to be challenged in the courts and ultimately be decided by the U.S. Supreme Court—and I am predicting here today they will say this is an unconstitutional act by the very same Federal officials who have taken an oath to uphold and defend the laws and Constitution of the United States—why we would do this is baffling to me.

So why could anyone think a bill such as this might actually be upheld? Well, there was a clever lawyer, as there frequently is behind novel legal theories. It was not until 1991, shortly after the Constitution's bicentennial, that a clever law student first advanced the argument that Congress could create a Representative for the District of Columbia through simple legislation. Legislation purporting to do that was first introduced in 2004. This novel legal theory lacks merit, as I have argued, and cannot overcome the weight of textual and historical evidence that would all but declare that this bill is unconstitutional.

Supporters of this theory cite the District clause of the Constitution that gives Congress power to "exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever" over the District. Because the District is not a State, it doesn't have a State legislature, and so Congress is given that authority under the Constitution. This plenary power, it is argued, gives Congress unfettered power to determine the District's representation in Congress.

But this power cannot be used in any kind of logical way to vitiate the carefully crafted apportionment of representation elsewhere in the four corners of the Constitution. By the logic of the act's supporters, Congress would exercise unlimited plenary power to repeal freedom of speech in the District or give the District 436 representatives in the House and 101 Senators.

The absurdity of this argument is highlighted by the fact this District clause goes on to give Congress the same plenary power—"Like Authority"—over Federal institutions such as, "Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings," in the quaint language of the Constitution. But surely this does not mean that on the basis of the District clause Congress can grant a vote in Congress to a federal dockyard or an arsenal. It doesn't make any sense.

Congress should not adopt an overly aggressive or overly expansive role of its powers under one section of the Constitution that allows it to violate—somehow magically—the clear language and intent of other provisions of the same Constitution. Like all of Congress's powers, the District clause is limited by the context and the rest of the same Constitution.

As the Supreme Court of the United States first noted back in the early 19th century in Marbury v. Madison, and has continually affirmed throughout our history, if Congress could alter the Constitution's meaning through mere legislation, then the Constitution would cease to be "superior, paramount law, unchangeable by ordinary means."

On another note, having argued from a historical perspective, and from the text of the Constitution the historical practice, the political impact of what the Senate is being asked to do—aside from these constitutional concerns—we need to look at the impact of this legislation on the size of congressional delegations in all other States after the 2010 census and beyond.

As I noted earlier, every 10 years we recalculate how many seats will be available to the U.S. House of Representatives from each State, since there is a fixed number. Of course now it is 435. Because of that, every 10 years some States are winners and some States are losers. High population growth States, such as my State—Texas—are likely to get as many as three new congressional seats after the next census. This bill would change the list of winners and losers after the 2010 census and for every census thereafter.

Think about this, colleagues: Some States clearly are going to lose a seat or two in Congress after the 2010 census. Just as my State will gain up to three seats, there will be other States that will lose a seat because of population shifts in our country. There are other States that are not clear winners or clear losers but are on the bubble. I ask my colleagues to consider what they are doing to the interests of their State before they vote on this bill. It could be that by voting for this legislation some Senators will be putting their States on the bubble now and for decades to come.

Now, what does that mean? Well, let me ask this question: Do you want to explain to your constituents that your State must lose a seat after the census so the District of Columbia can gain a seat by this legislation? Are Senators going to vote for a bill that might mean their State would receive one less congressional district after the next census, because they want the District to have one? Do you want to explain to your constituents that you would have had another seat after the census, but instead you are going to have the same number and the District of Columbia is going to grow by an additional seat as a result of your vote on this legislation?

The increase in House membership from 435 to 437 disguises this issue, but only if you are not paying very close attention. Think about this: If the membership of the House had been 437 after the 2000 census, which States would hold those two seats today? The answer would be Utah and New York. So New York is a big loser in this bill because we are expanding membership in the House without giving New York the seat its people deserve based on the current law.

We don't know which State will be the biggest loser after 2010. If the current census projection holds, it is likely to be New Jersey or Oregon. The fact is we don't know which State would be entitled to that 437th seat if it weren't awarded to the District of Columbia by this legislation. But we do know this: There will be winners and there will be losers. And there will be a new loser every 10 years after this bill passes if it is not struck down, as I predict it will be, by the U.S. Supreme Court.

The ultimate impact of this bill on our representation in the House of Representatives is unclear, but I believe the bill's lack of constitutional foundation is clear. For that reason, I believe Senator McCain's constitutional point of order should be sustained.

I will close where I started: Each of us, as U.S. Senators, has taken a sacred oath to uphold the laws and Constitution of the United States. So how, under any interpretation, would we vote to pass a law that is so clearly unconstitutional? Why is it that Congress would totally abdicate its responsibility in considering legislation to determine whether it is constitutional or not and to kick that responsibility over to the Federal courts?

I believe all of us—Members of the House, Members of the Senate, Federal judges, the President of the United States—have a responsibility to uphold the laws and the Constitution of the United States. And if this Senate passes this clearly unconstitutional legislation, it will have violated its sacred oath to uphold the Constitution, in my humble view.

I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, my friend from Arizona, Senator McCain, this morning raised what he called a constitutional point of order about S. 160. I would like to just respond to a few of his arguments.

He is my friend, and I appreciate his leadership in this body. I appreciate the fact that he went through this great campaign and asserted such influence but also such dedication to this country. I have appreciated his dedication to our country ever since I met him. But I do have some comments to make about his constitutional point of order.

The Senator from Arizona said that this bill is obviously, plainly, and blatantly unconstitutional because the District is not a State.

For him, the constitutional debate apparently begins and ends with a single word.

As I said on Tuesday, however, noting that the District is not a State is a factual observation; it is not itself a constitutional argument.

It is a premise, not a conclusion.

There are many other factors to consider in order properly to answer the constitutional question.

The Senator from Arizona is entitled to answer that question however he choose, but I believe it is necessary to at least consider the factors relevant to the answer.

I, for one, have not avoided the constitutional issue.

I have confronted the issue directly.

I have testified about it before the Senate Homeland Security Committee.

I have spoken about it on this floor.

I have written and published an extensive article about the issue.

I have sent that article to my colleagues, including to the Senator from Arizona.

I do not demand, or even expect, that my colleagues necessarily agree with me on this issue, but I would like to hear at least an attempt to respond to those arguments.

America's founders, those who wrote the Constitution we are talking about, passed legislation allowing Americans living on the land ceded for the District to vote in congressional elections. They did that.

That land was no more a State in 1790 than the District is today.

Those Americans did not live in a State.

I do not understand why treating District residents today as if they lived in a congressional district is constitutionally different than treating them in 1790 as if they lived in Virginia or Maryland.

No one argued in 1790 that doing so was unconstitutional.

It seems to me that the Constitution would have been, if anything, even more clear and plain to its own drafters in 1790 than it is to us Senators here today.

Congress has provided, by legislation, that Americans living abroad can vote in congressional elections.

They do not live in a State.

They do not even live in America.

I would like to hear from the Senator from Arizona why Congress can provide voting rights for Americans living in other countries but cannot provide voting rights for Americans living in this country.

If it were so obviously, plainly, and unequivocally obvious that the word "States" in the Constitution can never include the District, then the Supreme Court would not have ruled that the authority of Congress to regulate interstate commerce applies to the District.

The Supreme Court would not have ruled that the sixth amendment right to a speedy and public trial in the State where a crime was committed applies to the District.

The Supreme Court would not have ruled that Congress can extend to the District Federal Court jurisdiction over lawsuits between citizens of different States.

The Supreme Court would not have held that the apportionment of taxes among the States applies to the District.

The Supreme Court would not have upheld Congress's authority to implement in the District the fourteenth amendment's commands regarding the States.

The Supreme Court has indeed held all these things.

If Congress could not provide for the District the House representation the Constitution gives to the States, the Supreme Court would not have affirmed a decision saying that such a goal could indeed be pursued in the political process.

I assume the Senator from Arizona is aware of these and many other similar decisions over the past two centuries.

He is certainly entitled to believe that all of these decisions were wrongly decided.

But, with respect, rather than simply repeating the word States, he should at least attempt to explain why those decisions are all wrong or, in some way, are different than the issue before us now.

And, again with respect for my colleague whom I admire, these Court decisions establish that the Senator from Arizona is simply incorrect when he says that courts have consistently ruled that the word States excludes the District.

The Senator from Arizona also asked why territories would not be entitled to the same congressional representation as the District.

As the Senator himself acknowledged, however, the District is an entirely unique entity in America.

America's founders intended that the District permanently to be a jurisdiction separate from State control.

It should remain that way.

Territories, in contrast, are jurisdictions which can, and in some cases are intended to, become States.

I am unclear why the Senator from Arizona included this argument in a constitutional point of order because it is not a constitutional argument.

It is instead a political argument, and it has been raised and addressed before.

My friend from Arizona also questioned whether Utah is included in this bill.

As the Senator from Connecticut explained, both before and after the remarks of the Senator from Arizona, the House of Representatives must have an odd number of Members.

One will go to the District, and the other to the State which would have next qualified for one under the 2000 census.

As such, this decision was, as the Senator from Arizona said it should be, based on census data.

It is not, as he alleged, simply an arbitrary, irrational, backroom partisan political deal.

This debate about what the Constitution allows Congress to do is important and worthwhile.

I believe the constitutional foundation of this bill is more than sufficiently solid to justify voting for this bill and I hope my colleagues will.

I hope my colleagues will vote down this constitutional point of order which I think is not justified under either the Constitution or under our rules.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business for 6 minutes.

(The remarks of Mr. GRASSLEY pertaining to the introduction of S. 474 are printed in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. It is fortuitous that I happened to be on the Senate floor managing the DC Voting Rights Act. But I take this opportunity to thank my friend from Iowa for this introduction of this legislation.

It is consistent with not only the actions that I have been privileged to be involved with him on but what our committee has stood for. We will give it a thorough review and, hopefully, we will be able to bring it forward. Senator AKAKA is a very active and senior member of our committee. I am sure his advocacy will help a lot in moving the legislation forward. I thank my friend from Iowa for introducing this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARDIN). Under the previous order, the first 10 minutes prior to the 2 p.m. vote are equally divided and controlled by the Senator from Connecticut, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and the Senator from Arizona, Mr. MCCAIN.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I believe the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, Mr. BYRD, is going to speak in support of the point of order Senator MCCAIN has raised.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I oppose S. 160, the District of Columbia House Voting Rights Act. I must—in other words, I have to—review and renew my objections to legislation of this kind. I have to speak and speak loudly—can you hear me—to its flaws, as I have done when similar erroneous attempts have been made to amend the Constitution with legislation.

As I have said previously, my quarrel is not with the intent of the legislation but with the vehicle with which the Congress is seeking to effect this change.

What does the Constitution say? Article I, section 2, of the Constitution says—now listen:

The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the people of the several States . . .

The Constitution does not include the residents of the District of Columbia in this context as a State.

We know—or we ought to know—from our history books that our Founding Fathers sought out a Federal city that would not have to rely upon the protections of any one State. Their vision, the vision of the Founding Fathers, a center of government apart from the States, is seen in the distinction made in article I, section 8, between the "States" and a "District." Therefore, under the Constitution, the District is not a State. Consequently, a constitutional amendment is required to give the District's citizens voting representation in Congress. This is the step that ought to be taken. It is the step I have consistently supported. As far back as 1978, as the majority leader of the Senate, this body, I—let me identify myself: ROBERT C. BYRD—spoke in support of and voted for H.J. Res. 554, a joint resolution that proposed amending the Constitution to provide for representation of the District of Columbia in Congress. Where is that? Here.

Every Member of this Senate ascribes to the underlying tenet of our system of government; namely, that the Government of the United States of America serves only by the consent of its citizens, as expressed through their elected representatives. That is us, their elected representatives. Every Senator seeks the goal of upholding and perfecting our representative form of government, but the difference lies in how we seek to effect those rights.

I contend that this is no way to go about doing it. While the goal in this case is laudable, it is a dangerous course on which we embark. Simply passing a law that grants voting rights to an entity that is not a State is plainly circumventing the Constitution. As John Adams noted: "Facts are stubborn things." Let me say that again. This is John Adams talking now, not ROBERT C. BYRD. "Facts are stubborn things." That is right, I may say to the Senator.

Facts are stubborn things; and whatever may be our wishes, our inclination, or the dictates of our passions, they cannot alter the state of facts and evidence.

So I say this imperfect method of legislation employed to amend the Constitution has already been met with swift opposition and solid opposition. The text of the legislation anticipates that very outcome by providing for the Court's expedited review. And legal challenges will surely come quickly—don't doubt it—calling into question the validity of this legislation, and the fate of the District's long-sought voting rights will be further bogged down in a swamp—a swamp—of litigation.

Providing voting rights for the District through a constitutional amendment would provide the clarity and the constitutionality needed and would also avoid the path of litigation. Anything short of a constitutional amendment will be insufficient and will certainly set a dangerous precedent.

While it is indeed an arduous task to amend the Constitution, and rightly so, thank heavens, something so critical as representation in the House for the people of the District of Columbia compels it. Shortcuts have no place here. In this instance because of litigation, any shortcut, so-called, may turn out to be the long cut, the long way home for the very deserving, long-suffering people of the Capital City of this country, Washington, DC.

I will support the point of order raised by Senator McCAIN against the underlying bill, as it addresses this most crucial issue.

I thank the distinguished, very able Senator. I thank the Chair and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, during the remarks we have just been privileged to hear, the Senator from West Virginia said: "I—let me identify myself: ROBERT C. BYRD." May I say, there was no need for that identification. There is only one ROBERT C. BYRD. And may I add, it has been an honor to serve with you now for 20-plus years, to learn from you, to respect your love of the Senate, of the Constitution, and to hear you deliver the remarks that you have just delivered.

Mr. BYRD. It has been my honor, my dear friend.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Thank you, sir.

In the spirit of your history of great debate, I nonetheless, and with total respect, rise to oppose the point of order brought forth by the Senator from Arizona.

We have here a contest between two provisions of our great Constitution. The Senator from Arizona and the Senator from West Virginia rely on the provisions of article I, section 2, clause 1 that says the House Members be chosen by the people of the several States. Those of us who support the measure before us, S. 160, rely instead on article I, section 8, clause 17, the so-called District clause.

It is true the Constitution does require that House Members be elected by the people of the several States. But it is also true Congress has repeatedly not applied that language literally. To fully protect the interests of people living in the Capital City, the Framers gave Congress extremely broad authority over all matters related to the Federal District under the so-called District clause I have referred to.

Here is where the courts have spoken exactly to where we are now. The courts have said this clause, the District clause, gives Congress extraordinary and plenary power over the District of Columbia and, more to the point, have upheld congressional treatment of the District as a State for very important purposes of diversity jurisdiction and interstate commerce.

Article III, for instance, of the Constitution provides that courts may hear cases "between Citizens of different States." The Supreme Court actually initially ruled under this language that residents of our Nation's Capital could not sue residents of other States in Federal courts. But in 1940, Congress said that was wrong and asked that residents of the District be treated as a State for that purpose, a law that was upheld in the case of DC v. Tidewater Transfer Company of 1949.

The Constitution also allows Congress to regulate commerce among the several States. That is the language of the Constitution, which literally would exclude the District of Columbia and make it impossible for its residents to enjoy all the protections adopted under the Commerce clause. But Congress's authority to treat the District as a State for Commerce clause purposes was upheld in the case of Stoughten-burg v. Hennick.

So what we are asking for has constitutional precedent. More to the point, ultimately, or as much to the point, is the underlying reality that the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Arizona speak to eloquently, which I presume all of us share, which is, it is an outrageous injustice that 600,000 residents of America who happen to live in our Capital City do not have any voting representation in Congress.

Final point. The legislation before us presumes that there will be a legal challenge to its constitutionality, and that will be decided under the expedited procedures provided for in this legislation, in wording almost exactly similar to that provided in the so-called McCain-Feingold landmark campaign finance reform legislation. The Supreme Court will decide.

So if you feel the status quo is unjust, I still urge you to vote for this legislation, even if you wonder about the constitutional basis of it because ultimately that is the judgment of one of the other two branches of our Government that the Supreme Court will decide. Therefore, I respectfully ask my colleagues to vote no on the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I am aware that the hour has expired. I ask unanimous consent for 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I cannot add to the persuasive argument presented by the most respected Member of the Senate on constitutional matters and other matters. I thank Senator BYRD for his opinion. I thank him for his many years of service. I know all of us, however we vote on this issue, respect and admire his views. Thank you, sir.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the constitutional point of order raised by the Senator from Arizona, whether it is well taken. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. I announce that the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

NOT VOTING—1

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the constitutional point of order is not well taken.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

AMENDMENT NO. 579

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, I call up my amendment that is at the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to setting aside the pending amendment?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. THUNE], for himself, Mr. VITTER, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. WICKER, Mr. COBURN, Mr. DEMINT,

Mr. INHOFE, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. ENZI, and Mr. RISCCH, proposes an amendment numbered 579.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To amend chapter 44 of title 18, United States Code, to allow citizens who have concealed carry permits from the State or the District of Columbia in which they reside to carry concealed firearms in another State or the District of Columbia that grants concealed carry permits, if the individual complies with the laws of the State or the District of Columbia.)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ____ . RESPECTING STATES RIGHTS AND CONCEALED CARRY RECIPROCITY ACT OF 2009.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the “Respecting States Rights and Concealed Carry Reciprocity Act of 2009”.

(b) RECIPROCITY FOR THE CARRYING OF CERTAIN CONCEALED FIREARMS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 44 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 926C the following:

“§ 926D. Reciprocity for the carrying of certain concealed firearms

“Notwithstanding any provision of the law of any State or the District of Columbia or political subdivision thereof—

“(1) a person who is not prohibited by Federal law from possessing, transporting, shipping, or receiving a firearm, and is carrying a valid license or permit which is issued pursuant to the law of any State or the District of Columbia and which permits the person to carry a concealed firearm, may carry in any State or the District of Columbia a concealed firearm in accordance with the terms of the license or permit, subject to the laws of the State or the District of Columbia in which the firearm is carried concerning specific types of locations in which firearms may not be carried; and

“(2) a person who is not prohibited by Federal law from possessing, transporting, shipping, or receiving a firearm, and is otherwise than as described in paragraph (1) entitled to carry a concealed firearm in and pursuant to the law of the State or the District of Columbia in which the person resides, may carry in any State or the District of Columbia a concealed firearm in accordance with the laws of the State or the District of Columbia in which the person resides, subject to the laws of the State or the District of Columbia in which the firearm is carried concerning specific types of locations in which firearms may not be carried.”.

(2) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for chapter 44 of title 18 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 926C the following:

“926D. Reciprocity for the carrying of certain concealed firearms.”.

(c) SEVERABILITY.—If any other provision of this Act, another amendment made by this Act, or the application of such provision or amendment to any person or circumstance is held to be unconstitutional, this section and the application of the provisions of such to any person or circumstance shall not be affected thereby.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, my amendment is a very simple amendment. It allows individuals the right to carry a lawfully concealed firearm across State lines while at the same time respecting the laws of the host State. It is very similar to legislation I introduced earlier, a stand-alone bill, S. 371, which currently has 19 Senate cosponsors.

As I believe and the Supreme Court found last June, the second amendment of the Constitution provides law-abiding citizens have the right to possess firearms in order to defend themselves and their families. As such, I believe a State's border should not be a limit on this right. Today, there are 48 States that have laws permitting some form of concealed carry. While some States with concealed carry laws grant reciprocity to permit holders from other select States, what my amendment would do is eliminate the need for these laws by allowing an individual to carry a concealed firearm across State lines if they either have a valid permit or if under their State of residence they are legally entitled to do so.

After entering another State, the individual must respect the laws of the host State as they apply to conceal-and-carry permits, including the specific types of locations in which firearms may not be carried. Reliable empirical research shows that States with concealed carry laws enjoy significantly lower violent crime rates than those States that do not. For example, for every year a State has a concealed carry law, the murder rate declines by 3 percent, rape by 2 percent, and robberies by over 2 percent.

My amendment is relevant to this debate because it underscores the selective support that the District of Columbia has when it comes to individual rights such as the second amendment, and together with Senator ENSIGN's amendment will increase these rights. Specifically, anytime the word “State” is mentioned throughout my amendment, DC is also explicitly mentioned as well.

My amendment is a common-sense measure that will strengthen public safety throughout the Nation. And I would hope if the Senate is willing to pass the unconstitutional legislation that is before us—the underlying bill creating an additional Member of Congress within the District of Columbia—then the Senate should also be able and willing to pass amendments which are constitutional and protect each citizen's second amendment rights.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment, and I yield the floor.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

AMENDMENT NO. 585

(Purpose: To provide for the retrocession of the District of Columbia to the State of Maryland, and for other purposes)

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, in a few moments I am going to propose an amendment. I thought to conserve time that I would simply describe the amendment now, and then as soon as it is copied, I will distribute it and ask unanimous consent that the pending business be laid aside so that I can offer that amendment.

This is the retrocession amendment. It is an amendment that has been frequently offered in the House of Representatives over the years, and it is the alternative to the constitutional mechanism for providing the District of Columbia with representation in the House and Senate.

Rather than going the constitutional amendment route, there is one thing we know we can constitutionally do legislatively. Congress has the ability to retrocede to the State of Maryland all of the non-Federal areas within the District of Columbia that adjoin Maryland. The effect of that, obviously, is to give the residents of the District of Columbia today the same rights as other citizens of Maryland, if this procedure were to be followed.

Under this amendment, it would require an affirmative action of the Legislature of the State of Maryland, so that if the Legislature of Maryland did not wish to proceed with this, then it would not occur. It also would require the repeal of the 23rd amendment to the Constitution, as I will describe in just a moment. But the effect of it is, as I said, to allow the residents of the District to enjoy representation in both the House of Representatives and the Senate. It would do so without violating the Constitution's requirements that only States be represented in Congress and it would do so without creating a city state that would have disproportionate leverage in Congress and over the Federal budget.

The amendment provides quite simply that after certain conditions are satisfied:

The territory ceded to Congress by the State of Maryland to serve as the District constituting the permanent seat of the Government of the United States is ceded and relinquished to the State of Maryland.

Retrocession, as I said, includes a minor exception for the so-called national areas—the White House, the Capitol building, the Supreme Court building, and the other Federal buildings and monuments around the National Mall. The length of the amendment is simply due to the fact that there is a full description in section 3 of the amendment of the area that would remain under the exclusive jurisdiction and control of the Congress.

There is an important transition provision that would allow lawsuits begun in the District of Columbia to be continued in Maryland courts. The amendment also provides that until the next reapportionment, the DC Delegate will serve as a full Member of the House of Representatives from Maryland. As I said, there are two conditions that would have to be satisfied before it takes effect. First, the State of Maryland would have to enact accepting the retrocession of the District to Maryland; and second, amendment XXIII, which currently gives the District three electoral votes in Presidential elections, would need to be repealed.

The reason for this is that in the absence of such a repeal, amendment XXIII might be construed not to be mooted and might be construed to give the very few residents living around the National Mall three electoral votes. The intent here is not to capture anyone who actually has an abode in that area, but there are some people who might be living there nonetheless.

We believe the amendment is the most reasonable means of providing representation in Congress to the residents of the District. It is a solution that is based on precedent. Obviously, as we all know, in 1846 the part of the District south of the Potomac River was retroceded to the Commonwealth of Virginia and became Arlington County and old Alexandria. We have done this before. We know how it works.

If we adopt the amendment, the residents of Maryland could have a vote in the House and in the Senate within a year or two. If we continue down our current unconstitutional path, the legislation will be tied up in litigation for several years and, at least in the view of many of us, then struck down and we will be back at the drawing board. Unlike proposals to grant statehood to the District of Columbia, retrocession provides representation to the District residents in the national legislature but without creating a city state that would further skew representation in the Senate.

In that regard, I would note that the number of people represented in most of the congressional districts of the United States exceeds the number of people who are residents of the District of Columbia. As State population continues to grow, there is every reason to believe that ratio would continue to exist.

I urge my colleagues to support this sensible constitutional means of providing representation in Congress to the residents of the District of Columbia.

At this point I ask unanimous consent that pending business be laid aside for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to setting aside the pending amendment?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona (Mr. KYL) proposes an amendment numbered 585.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of Amendments.")

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I note for the benefit of colleagues that we now have, I think, two pending amendments.

I urge my Republican colleagues, if they wish to speak to either of these two amendments or to lay down further amendments—we have good cooperation here on both sides of the aisle to move forward with this legislation, and if Members who have an interest can be here and express their views or offer their amendments, we can move through the bill more quickly.

I will suggest the absence of a quorum here, but in the event Members on the Republican side wish to speak, certainly this would be a good time for them to come down and speak to the bill and offer amendments.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, there are several amendments pending. This is a bill which is trying to make history. I thank Senator LIEBERMAN, Senator HATCH, and others for bringing this bill to the floor. We have 600,000 residents who live right here in the District of Columbia who do not have a vote. They do not have a vote in the House of Representatives nor in the Senate. They never have. They were created as a kind of Capitol District without a voting Congressman, Congresswoman, or Senator. Of course, the people in the District of Columbia pay Federal taxes. Their sons and daughters take an oath to protect America and march off to war. At least seven have recently died in Iraq and Afghanistan. They are bound by virtually all the Federal laws that people in Illinois or Oregon or Connecticut would be bound by, but they do not have a voice.

There is no representation of 600,000 people. I think that is a gross miscarriage of justice. I salute those who bring this bill to the floor today to give the District of Columbia, specifically the 600,000 people who live here, that voice in Congress. It is long overdue.

But there is an interesting relationship between Congress and the District of Columbia. Even though they do not have a voice in the Congress, Congress has always had a voice in the District. Congress has assumed a role somewhere between Governor and mayor when it comes to the District of Columbia. I have seen it when I served in the House and the Senate. A lot of Members from all over the United States of America who secretly long to be mayors get their chance. They come to Washington, they come to Congress, and they sit down and they play mayor for the District of Columbia.

They make all kinds of decisions, decisions that do not relate to war and peace or Federal Government; decisions that in most places are going to be confined to mayors and city councils or Governors or legislatures. People in Congress cannot suppress the urge to be mayors, so they make all kinds of rules for the District of Columbia. Some of them are nothing short of outrageous.

They delve into issues which the people in this city ought to decide for themselves—zoning issues, issues of public health, issues that, frankly, we do not have any business working on. But we can't stop ourselves. These Senators who want to be mayors get their chance. You can be a Senator from another State, but you can play part-time mayor in the District of Columbia.

That is one of the good reasons for this underlying bill, so finally at least some person can stand up in the House of Representatives and say: I am representing these people and these people do not care for what you are doing to them.

Along come a couple of amendments here. They are in this big constitutional debate, history making, about the future of Washington, DC, and several of my colleagues cannot suppress the urge to be mayor. They want to be mayor of the District of Columbia.

One of them has come in with a proposal relative to firearms in the District of Columbia. This is offered by Senator ENSIGN of the State of Nevada and about a half dozen or a dozen other Republican Senators. Here is what they are trying to do.

They want us to write the ordinances for firearms in the District of Columbia. Are we going to do it in a committee hearing? Bring in the police? Bring in the experts? Sit down and do this thoughtfully? No. We are not going to have any committee hearings. We are going to allow the National Rifle Association to write the gun ordinance for the District of Columbia.

Do you want to guess what is going to be in that ordinance? Not much, when it comes to dealing with firearms.

I guess you could be sarcastic and say why would you worry about controlling firearms in Washington, DC? I am not going to be sarcastic because I can recall a time not that long ago when a deranged individual brought a gun into this Capitol building and fatally injured two Capitol Hill policemen before he was finally suppressed.

I can recall when a President of the United States at the Washington Hilton hotel on Connecticut Avenue, a man by the name of Ronald Reagan, was shot down in the District of Columbia.

I can recall time and again the efforts made, by men and women who are Capitol police officers, to protect us and our visitors, wondering at any moment whether someone was going to open fire on them.

I can recall not that long ago an inauguration with 2 million people on the Mall and the overwhelming concern we all had for the safety of everyone involved and particularly for our new President or First Lady, the First Family. I saw the length we went through to protect them because of the obvious—we live in a dangerous place. We live in a dangerous time. A person with a gun, if they are willing to lose their own lives, can take out the lives of almost anyone. That is a fact. So, is there reason for us to be careful when it comes to guns? In my hometown of Springfield there is. In the great city of Chicago that I represent, you bet there will be. Kids are getting gunned down every day—certainly in Washington, DC, our capital city.

Guns need to be taken seriously—I won't say more seriously. Every life is precious. But when we are entertaining visitors from around the world who come to our Washington, DC, U.S. Capitol, we want to offer them protection and safety as they travel. Maybe it is a special circumstance here. But this town needs to be as safe as possible, for the people arriving here, for the visitors, for all of us.

So the National Rifle Association has decided they want to establish the standard for firearms in the District of Columbia. Let me tell you what they would do, to give you an idea if they could write the ordinance for guns in the District of Columbia, with the Ensign amendment. There are a few things they would like to do. The amendment would provide:

The District of Columbia government shall not have authority to enact laws or regulations that discourage or eliminate the private ownership or use of firearms.

If that is your starting point, listen to what follows. It blocks the District of Columbia from passing any background check or registration regulations, even sensible regulations that are needed to help law enforcement know who is buying guns. So the first thing the NRA wants to do is say we cannot ask you for a background check to find out if you should be able to own a firearm in the District of Columbia. What a great starting point.

It also prevents the District of Columbia passing laws that require gun proficiency training. It even prohibits them from educating parents about child gun safety.

You read the stories—we all do—about children killed when they find a firearm at home, play with it, shoot themselves or a playmate, a little brother or a little sister. This bill would prohibit the District of Columbia from establishing gun safety training.

The amendment would also prohibit the DC City Council from taking steps to unduly burden—that is the language of the bill—the acquisition or use of firearms by persons not already prohibited under Federal law. That means that DC could not pass a law, for example, restricting access to guns by those convicted of misdemeanor sex offenses involving a child.

That is a fact—because the Federal law does not prohibit that, DC could not. A person convicted of a misdemeanor sex offense with a child could not be prohibited, under this NRA amendment, from owning a firearm in the District of Columbia. Make you feel safer? Would it make anyone feel safer? Obviously, some people at the NRA would.

Let me tell you what else. It repeals the age limits for legal gun possession. Now, this is a good one. Let's basically say you cannot tell someone you are too young to own a gun or maybe too old and feeble. It repeals DC's prohibition on gun possession by anyone who was voluntarily committed to a mental institution in the last 5 years. How many times have we heard the stories on college campuses, in my State, in the State of Virginia, of someone who had a serious mental illness, turned to violence and killed innocent people?

It happened in Illinois. It happened in Virginia. It happened in other places. So governments try to keep guns out of the hands of people who are mentally unstable. The Ensign amendment would stop the government of the District of Columbia from imposing that standard when it came to possession of a firearm.

It also repeals, while we are at it, not just those voluntarily committed to mental institutions, but it would repeal the DC government's prohibition on gun possession for those who have been judged by a court to be chronic alcoholics; you cannot stop them. Under this Ensign amendment, they can own a gun. It is their second amendment right.

Well, I will tell you what. That is not what the Supreme Court said. The Supreme Court said reasonable regulation of firearms was still the standard in America. But I am afraid the Ensign amendment goes way beyond reasonable regulation.

Well, here is another one. What if you had a requirement that before someone could buy a gun in the District of Columbia, they had to be able to see, a vision test. Not unreasonable. You want to have a gun or drive a car, you ought to be able to do it safely. This bill would prohibit the District of Columbia from imposing an onerous burden that a person has to pass a vision test in order to own a firearm.

I find this incredible. It is also unimaginable to me that this law expressly allows the residents of the District of Columbia to cross borders into our States, buy firearms and come back. There is no restriction, no limitation.

Now, I admit it has not worked very well. There has been a lot of gun violence in this town, even with that law. But why do we want to raise this white flag and say we are not even going to try to restrict or limit them? So when the supporters of the Ensign amendment say DC does not need any gun laws because Federal gun laws are strong enough, pay attention, they are, in fact, trying to weaken Federal gun laws at the very same time they are passing this amendment.

We do not debate guns around here much anymore. We used to. Basically, we reached a point where there are not many people who will stick their political necks out to vote for sensible gun control—too big a hassle. The NRA is going to target you back home, and you are going to have to spend a lot of money to try to explain to people, as I have, if you want to own a gun, if you want to use it safely, responsibly, for self-defense or sporting purposes, your right should be protected.

But you also ought to accept the responsibility, the responsibility to make certain that people check on your background so you do not have a criminal record, a history of mental illness, chronic alcoholism. You ought to be able to limit the kind of guns people buy. I mean, there are some people in my State and all over who say you should not limit people. They should be able to buy whatever they want.

I do not buy that. I have always said, if you need an AK-47 to go deer hunting, you ought to stick to fishing. Obviously, you do not know how to use a gun, you just want to spray bullets until something stops moving. There are also limitations in most places as to where you can take your gun and how you can use it. I do not think that is unreasonable.

Coming from a family, people who are hunters and sportsmen, they are pretty conscientious. They lock up the guns in the gun cabinet. They know when the rabbit season starts and when the squirrel season starts and they are out there. They do not want to take their gun into the mall. It would not make, in my opinion, sense to them. That gun has a purpose.

But there are other people who disagree, people who think this is an absolute right. I am afraid that is what has inspired the Ensign amendment. I do not know if Senator ENSIGN or the people, the dozen or so folks who have cosponsored this amendment, have all gone back to their home States and said: We hope you will do exactly this. My guess is they have not. My guess is Senator ENSIGN has not gone to the mayor of Las Vegas and said: Let's take all the gun laws out; that ought to help us bring in some tourists. I do not think he has done that. Maybe he has, in all fairness. I will give him his chance to respond to that on the floor.

But it strikes me as peculiar and fundamentally unjust that Senators who will not impose these standards in their own hometowns want to impose them in the District of Columbia. They do not have the courage to stand in their own hometowns and say: We ought to let people with a history of mental illness have guns. Why? Because reasonable people would say to them: Are you out of your mind? They would not say someone judged by the court as a chronic alcoholic ought to be able to buy an assault weapon. Not unless you happen to live in the Nation's Capital, where Senators get to be mayor, where Senators try to write gun laws, where Senators pass ordinances here. It is a shame.

It has been going on for a long time. I am not picking on the sponsors of this amendment. It has been going on as long as I have been here. But it does not make any sense. If there was ever a town, and if there was ever a time where we should take the extra measure to be safe, it is this town at this moment.

We have to make sure the men and women who serve in elected office, the wonderful staff people whom we have, the millions of visitors who come into this building come in with peace of mind, knowing they and their families are going to be safe, not to worry that some law passed in the Senate is going to create a shooting gallery right outside the Capitol grounds.

This amendment does not make good sense. It certainly does not make common sense. It is not required by the Supreme Court. It is an amendment that basically is an attempt for the National Rifle Association to do a little temperature check, find out where they are in this new Congress, to push to the limits the gun issue and to see who is going to follow it.

I know a lot of Members who said: Well, that is their decision, I respect them for it. But I respectfully disagree. Let us keep DC safe. Let's make sure all the people who value this city and the great tradition and heritage of this city take an extra measure to make it a safe place for visitors, for those who live here, for kids going to school, for folks going to church on Sunday. I do not think they deserve anything less.

If one of those Senators, any one of these Senators want to stand up and say: I have proposed this gun ordinance in my hometown and my home State, I think it should apply to Washington, they would have more credibility. But without that, they just want to experiment, experiment on a city that for over 200 years has not had a voice in this Congress, experiment on a city that is a helpless victim, many times to these political experiments that people like to try, through Congress, on Washington, DC.

I urge my colleagues: Read this. Take the time to read this amendment. Pause and reflect and ask yourself one question: Would I want this in my hometown? Is this a standard? I know some will say yes, but most will say no. This is extreme. This goes too far.

The District of Columbia is trying its best after the Supreme Court challenged and voided one of its ordinances. It rewrote its gun law. It allows for the registration of pistols, revolvers, and long guns for self-defense at home. So people in the District can have a gun in their home for self-defense.

It bans assault weapons and junk guns used for crime. It prevents persons with a history of violence within 5 years from registering a gun. It prevents a person convicted of domestic violence or who is the subject of a protective order, within 5 years, from registering a gun.

It prevents a person with multiple alcohol-related offenses within 5 years from registering a gun. It requires that an applicant for a gun complete a firearm safety training course. It limits an applicant to registering one gun every 30 days. It bans magazines on guns over 10 rounds. It tightens gun dealer licensing requirements. It requires all new semiautomatic pistols to be stamped so they can be traced in a crime.

It protects children by requiring registrants to safely store their firearms, and it abolishes concealed carry licenses, except in very narrow circumstances. That is the law if you want to own a gun in the District of Columbia. If you have a legal right to do so, you have to follow some basic rules, commonsense rules, rules that will be thrown right out the window with the Ensign amendment.

That is not good for the District, it is not good for America. I urge my colleagues to oppose this amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

AMENDMENT NO. 573

Mr. DEMINT. Mr. President, I appreciate the comments of the Senator from Illinois, and I think it helps to set up some of my comments as well. We are talking about a bill on DC voting rights that has a lot to do with our Constitution. I have an amendment to that that also has a lot to do with our Constitution; that is, the right of free speech and the right of freedom of the press, what we will call the Broadcasters Freedom Act.

The interesting point about the talk of my previous colleague is, he was talking about the urge to be mayor here in the Senate. It is interesting, after we just passed this massive stimulus bill, where we were telling not only mayors but every Governor in the country what they had to do and how they need to spend their money, to control everything from education to health care.

We cannot resist the urge to be Governors and mayors and, in fact, we cannot resist the urge to substitute our opinions of what should happen to our whole constitutional form of Government. It is interesting to hear about the guns amendment and the opinions there. I respect the Senator's opinion about the gun laws, what they should be.

But the fact is, that what we do here is not about our opinion, it is about our oath of office, of protecting and defending the Constitution. The Constitution does not give me a right to decide who is going to bear arms. I mean it is a basic constitutional right.

It does not give us the right to use our own opinions and good intentions on every piece of legislation. One of the reasons as a country we are so much in debt—and this is attributed to both parties—is we have moved away from any constitutional mooring of limited Government to the point now where it is whoever's opinion can prevail is what passes.

An appeal to the Constitution is almost irrelevant. There is no way you can interpret the Constitution to say the Federal District of Columbia is going to have Congressmen and Senators. Now, I respect an opinion of anyone who says it should not be that way, that people who pay taxes should have Congressmen and Senators. But the fact is, our oath of office is to defend the Constitution, not to employ our own opinions, to do what we think is right, to get money for our States.

That is a pretty simple judgment to make in this case, if we can count, if we can look at the language of the Constitution and see something so obvious. Now, sure, we do not like it, we do not like the way it has turned out. There are 600,000 people living here and a lot of people with very good intentions say they should have the same rights as States. But that is our opinion, it is not the Constitution.

What worries me about a lot of our rights that are given in the Constitution, particularly our Bill of Rights, not only the right to bear arms, which people's opinion is being substituted for the Constitution, but the same thing has happened with the right of free speech, the freedom of the press in our country, which has been so instrumental to maintaining freedom and the ability of the American people to be vigilant over their Government, finding out what is going on here.

Back in 1949, the Federal Government implemented what was called the fairness doctrine over concerns that with the relatively few number of radio stations across the country, a diversity of opinion would not be heard.

Substituting our own good opinion for that of the Constitution, there are some in Washington who decided we needed to referee what was said on radio.

If one political opinion was expressed, the fairness doctrine required that they have an opposite opinion also expressed. The whole idea was to create a diversity of points of view. The fact is, as with many things we do here, it had exactly the opposite effect of what was intended. It put a chilling effect on political speech because what radio station would want to deal with the liability of expressing an opinion if someone else was going to come in and say they had to have somebody else express a different opinion? It violates the right of free speech and, in the process, actually puts a chilling effect on the development of political points of view in radio.

In 1987, it had become obvious what this was doing. Thousands of radio stations were developing all over the country. The Reagan administration overturned this so-called fairness doctrine, which was really a radio censorship act. With that act gone, we have seen the development of radio talk shows all over the country. One can tune in anywhere and get all kinds of diversity of opinion.

Frankly, it has become very annoying to a lot of Congressmen and Senators. There is nothing worse than going home and trying to tell people one thing, and they actually find out that is not the truth. Increasingly, that has been happening with bills we are passing, when folks back home find out through talk radio those guys didn't even read that bill. The front cover of that bill says it is not amnesty, but the bill says it is. The President says there are no earmarks, but open it up and there are thousands of earmarks in the bill. The President says he is expanding our energy supplies, but then look and see that they actually have a drilling moratorium that we didn't know about.

Talk radio has become very annoying to politicians who don't want Americans to know the truth. So increasingly a number of people in Congress are looking back to that fairness doctrine and thinking we need to bring it back. We need to censor radio talk shows. We need to create that liability, that risk. Every time someone freely expresses an opinion, that station needs to know that they are liable to make sure another opinion is expressed.

Who is going to decide what should be expressed? The Governors and the Mayor in Washington? In fact, what we are finding out is so many people on the other side can't resist the urge to be Founding Fathers. They want to change the Constitution and change what it means and ignore it. But freedom of speech is so important. The fact is, people in this Senate who swore an oath to the Constitution are actually advocating bringing back radio censorship and certainly will eventually apply it to the blogosphere and the Web. They will not stop with radio talk shows. We need to act to make sure this oppression, this tyranny is not re-imposed on the American people.

It is not just important to protect what radio talk show hosts can say. What we are really trying to protect is what millions of Americans are free to listen to: different opinions, facts, information about where to find more complete information about what is going on. The primary reason more and more Americans are standing up and are outraged about what is going on here is because they are finally finding out the truth about what we are doing, how much money we are spending, how much we are borrowing, the porkbarrel earmarks we are sending all over the country, basically changing the mission of the Federal Government from one that stands for the national interest and constitutional government to one that is essentially trying to run local governments and State governments and to rearrange the Constitution.

The Federal Communications Commission could actually reimplement this radio censorship idea without Congress. That is why my amendment I will offer tomorrow, the Broadcasters Freedom Act, will prohibit the Federal Communications Commission from bringing back any part of the radio censorship they called at one time the fairness doctrine.

Some here will say it is not germane to this debate on DC voting rights. But DC voting rights are about the Constitution and whether we will follow it. If we don't respect the Constitution on one issue, why should we respect it on another? The fact that people at the FCC and here in Congress are talking about bringing it back means it is germane to this discussion. It is germane to everything we do here, the right to freedom of speech. The freedom of the press is so foundational to our form of government, our way of life, it is germane to everything we do here.

This amendment is so important to what we do because if we can't get the American people informed and engaged and activated and get them to stand and express their outrage, this Government, this Congress, is going to continue to violate the Constitution at every turn; to substitute their opinion, whether it be the first amendment or second amendment, any time their opinion is different from the Constitution. Their belief and the prevailing belief here in Congress is, if you can pass something, then it is legal. It doesn't matter if it violates the Constitution. What will matter is if the American people know what we are doing. They are going to stand up. They will e-mail. They will call. They will express their outrage to these people who are taking our constitutional rights every day. They are going to hear from the people back home, and they will back down or they will be brought home at the next election.

That is why radio freedom, freedom of the press, talk radio, bloggers, cable TV, all these alternative media that are going around, the New York Times and the other liberal press, and taking the truth and the facts to the American people is something we have to protect with our lives in Congress. The broadcasters freedom amendment that will be offered tomorrow is critically important to what we do.

I urge all of my colleagues, don't buy these lame arguments that it is not germane to this constitutional debate. Don't buy the argument that it is not relevant because no one is bringing it up. We have seen what people can sneak into bills that we don't get a chance to read. We need to make it a law that the FCC or this Congress cannot implement any aspect of the fairness doctrine. That is what this amendment is about.

I urge colleagues to take the Constitution seriously, take this amendment seriously. Vote for it and show the American people that we will stand for their constitutional rights.

I yield the floor.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. BURRIS. Mr. President, I rise to support the District of Columbia House Voting Rights Act. For too long politics has trumped basic fairness. This is not a bill for statehood but one that ensures the simple and long overdue right of American citizens to have a voice in their Government. It is the duty of any democracy to have every citizen represented. America is a model for democracy around the world. Right here at home in our own Capital City almost 600,000 Americans live without a full vote in their Government. Passage of this bill is a matter of fundamental rights. Citizens of Washington, DC, pay taxes like everyone else, but they have no voice in how their taxes are spent. The phrase "no taxation without representation" used by the original Thirteen Colonies is every bit as relevant today.

The residents of our Capital City pay one of the highest tax rates in the Nation, but they do not have a single voting representative in either House of Congress. Unlike every other city in America, Washington, DC, is forced to remain dependent upon Congress for even the most basic functions. Congress has control over DC's local budget. Congress can review and overturn laws that DC residents pass. Even more important to consider is the brave service and sacrifice Washington's men and women in uniform make in serving our Nation in the Armed Forces. These great patriots deserve full participation in Congress.

The foundation of our system of government is that all citizens are represented in the Federal Government. Today we must make good on the promise and grant full and fair representation to the people of Washington, DC.

This issue has been around a long time. Finally, in this bill, we have a balanced and sensible approach, one seat for the District of Columbia and one additional seat for the State of Utah.

I urge passage of this bill to give full, equal voice to the residents of this District and allow those 600,000 citizens to finally become full members of our Republic.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURRIS). The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada, Mr. ENSIGN, with regard to gun control. I do so for five reasons.

First, this amendment is completely unrelated to the DC House Voting Rights Act before us today. If it bears any relationship to this bill, it is in an inadvertent, unintended way to make the point of how badly we in Congress treat the District, as if we have the right not only to deprive it of voting representation in the House of Representatives—600,000 residents without voting representation, no government with consent of the governed—but we exercise, by this amendment, if it passes, the right to intervene in the District when its own legislative body, the council, has legislated and impose our desires on them.

Let me come back to my first point. The amendment is unrelated to the DC House Voting Rights Act. We should not be adding controversial, non-germane issues to what I believe is a historic civil rights bill that finally nullifies what has gone on for most of American history, which is a voting rights injustice. Residents of the District have fought for decades to win the voting rights the rest of us take for granted. It has taken tremendous work over more than this year to get this bill to where it is today, to enable us to actually be on the Senate floor debating a voting rights bill.

We had a good debate earlier on a constitutional point of order raised by the Senator from Arizona, Mr. MCCAIN, that went to the heart of the bill. That is what we ought to be debating. That point of order was rejected, but it was relevant to what we are all about in S. 160. Congress has on many occasions, of course, debated legislation related to gun ownership, which is the subject of the Ensign amendment, unrelated to the DC House Voting Rights Act. No doubt we will have the opportunity to debate the issue of gun ownership and gun rights in the future. Opponents have raised relevant concerns about the constitutionality and appropriateness of the legislation we are considering. That is what we should be debating, not gun legislation.

I fear, of course, in doing so, what we are doing on the Ensign amendment is we are going to cloud the prospects for this bill with controversial, unrelated amendments that take us from the focus here, which is that 600,000 Americans do not have voting representation in Congress.

Second, I believe Congress should not limit the District's ability to enact its own measures with regard to gun violence. Some Senators, Members of this body, may believe as a policy matter that the District's gun laws are not adequate, not correct, but the District's gun laws have no effect whatsoever on the varying gun ownership laws of the States. The fact is that none of our constituents—not one of our constituents—will be affected or is affected by the gun laws of the District of Columbia. We do not represent anybody who is a resident and voter in the District of Columbia.

The gun rights of residents of other States are guided and controlled and enabled pursuant to the laws and regulations enacted by the elected officials and executive officials in those States. Likewise, the elected officials of the District of Columbia have enacted laws regarding gun ownership that I believe this body should respect, just as I would want this body to respect the laws of my State with regard to guns or anything else. As I will explain in a moment, in fact, the District of Columbia has enacted new gun laws in response to the court case of DC v. Heller. Congress should not be singling out particular States and localities to repeal their laws on guns or anything else.

This is not a uniform nationwide standard that will be adopted if the Ensign amendment passes. This is a law with regard to guns for the District of Columbia. It is as if a law of my State of Connecticut was challenged in the Supreme Court, and it was invalidated, and actually my legislature then responded to the constitutional invalidation by adopting a law which they believed was consistent with the Supreme Court decision, but then we in Congress came along and said: No, Connecticut, that is not enough. We are going to tell you exactly what your law should be—not for the entire United States of America but for the State of Connecticut. I would be outraged. Any Member of this Chamber would be outraged if we did to one of our States what this amendment proposes to do to the District. It is just not fair, and it is not consistent with our basic principles of limited Federal Government and the rights of States and localities to legislate for themselves.

That is my second point. Congress should not limit the District's ability to enact laws of its own regarding guns or anything else.

The third point is this: This amendment is actually outdated. The Ensign amendment is the same as legislation that passed the House last September to remove restrictions on gun ownership in the District. But there is an important point that has been left out here.

Last month, January, the District's government enacted new gun laws that are their response to the holding of the Supreme Court in the DC v. Heller decision. The Heller decision struck down several provisions of the District's previous municipal code regarding guns. The decision particularly invalidated the District's handgun ban and trigger lock-storage requirement. But consistent with the newly enacted District of Columbia law adopted by the council, those provisions are no longer in the law. So the Ensign amendment, in fact, is outdated. In fact, if you look carefully at this amendment, it repeals and modifies provisions that used to be in the DC law but no longer are because the recent enactment of the DC City Council removed those provisions of the law.

So my third point is the Ensign amendment is outdated and does not relate to the reality that has been created by the District's City Council itself.

Fourth, let me talk about the District's new gun measures and their relationship to the Heller decision. The Supreme Court made clear in its decision in Heller that the second amendment meant something. It is something this Senator has always felt. There is a constitutional right to bear arms. But that right, I have always felt, is no more unlimited than any other right in the Constitution, including the fundamental—I would almost say sacred—rights in the first amendment. Those are not unlimited either, as we know. So the Supreme Court decision said that the total bans in the DC law on gun ownership, possession of guns in the home, were unconstitutional and violative of the second amendment. But the decision also made clear that reasonable regulation of gun ownership was permissible.

This amendment essentially invalidates a whole series of what I believe the Supreme Court would find to be reasonable regulations of gun ownership and again does not acknowledge what the DC City Council has done.

The gun laws the District passed last month restore the right of gun ownership for self-defense in homes here in the District and amend the District's safe-storage requirements so that a firearm no longer needs to be kept bound by a trigger lock within the home. The District's new gun law permanently repealed DC's ban on semi-automatic firearms and permits residents to own semiautomatic pistols. If you look at the Ensign amendment, you would not believe that was true. In fact, in the Inoperable Pistol Amendment Act of 2008, the city of the District of Columbia provided a self-defense exception to allow residents with registered firearms to carry these weapons lawfully in their homes or places of business. Additionally, the Firearms Control Amendment Act of 2008 exempted from the registration requirement "[a]ny person who temporarily possesses a firearm registered to another person while in the home of the registrant" if that person believes they are in imminent danger. So these are the very real rights of gun owners that are now enshrined, adopted in the DC law that has been passed.

My fifth point is this, and I referred to it a moment ago: The Ensign amendment goes much further than the Supreme Court did in limiting the right of localities, States, and municipalities to regulate gun ownership while recognizing the second amendment constitutional right to bear arms. In fact, Justice Scalia wrote the majority opinion in the Heller case, and he specifically noted that a wide range of gun laws would be lawful and not violative of the second amendment—everything from laws "forbidding the carrying of firearms in sensitive places" to "conditions and qualifications on the commercial sale of arms."

The amendment offered by my colleague from Nevada would overturn provisions that the Heller decision did not address and did not strike down.

This amendment provides that the government of the District of Columbia "shall not have authority to enact laws or regulations that discourage or eliminate the private ownership or use of firearms." Potentially, this could prevent the District from passing legislation regarding background checks, which have been widely accepted by courts, or registration regulations that are needed to help law enforcement keep tabs of who is buying and owning guns in the District.

The Ensign amendment repeals DC's ban on sniper rifles that can pierce armor plating up to a mile away and its ban on military-style semiautomatic weapons and high-capacity ammunition magazines.

The amendment repeals DC's requirements—modeled on a California law which has been strongly supported by law enforcement agencies—that semiautomatic pistols manufactured after January 1, 2011, be microstamp-ready. Microstamping is a law enforcement tool that helps solve gun crimes by imprinting shell casings with a unique identifier so they can quickly be matched to the handguns that fire them.

The Ensign amendment also repeals the District's age limits for legal gun possession. Imagine how we would feel in my State of Connecticut or in the Presiding Officer's State of Illinois if Congress came along and told us how to write laws for our States.

This amendment repeals the District of Columbia's prohibition on gun possession by anyone who was voluntarily committed to a mental institution in the last 5 years. It repeals the District's prohibition on gun possession for those who have been adjudicated as chronic alcoholics and those who have failed a vision test. This would be—I do not even want to say it. It is shocking.

The amendment also weakens Federal law. Federal law prohibits gun dealers from selling handguns directly to out-of-State consumer buyers because of the high risk this creates for interstate gun trafficking. But this amendment would allow DC residents to cross State lines to buy handguns in neighboring States, undermining those Federal antitrafficking laws.

It is no surprise that the chief of police of the District of Columbia, Cathy Lanier, has testified that the legislation on which the Ensign amendment is based would undermine safety and security in the Nation's Capital.

So those are five reasons why I believe this amendment should not be adopted. But as the chairman of the committee that has reported out the underlying bill and as somebody who personally has worked for a lot of years to try to right this wrong on the residents of the District of Columbia, our Nation's Capital—the capital of the greatest democracy in the world—not having a voting representative in Congress, I just think this amendment, leaving aside its merits or demerits, adds something to this historic piece of legislation that just does not belong and may, along the way, complicate its path to passage.

So regardless of your position on gun control—and I state again, I have always believed the second amendment has meaning, that it makes constitutional the right to bear arms, but that it is not unlimited—this amendment comes close to a judgment that the second amendment really is unlimited. So that is why I, on its merits, think it goes too far.

But whatever you think of the merits, if you really believe in helping eliminate one of the last vestiges of voting rights blocks in our country—when you think about it, when the Constitution was adopted, people of color could not vote. Good God, people of color were only counted as three-fifths of people who were White. Woman could not vote. A lot of men could not vote if they were not property owners. And over the years, on this journey of ours, from the ideals in our Declaration of Independence, we have gone forward to eliminate one after another block to the reality that the Government was premised on that you would not have governing without the consent of the governed. Yet this bizarre anomaly remains in our Nation's Capital where people are deprived of the right to have a voting representative here.

So I appeal to my colleagues, whatever your position on gun ownership and gun violence, whatever your position on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada, please don't stand in the doorway, as Bob Dylan once sang, and block this underlying bill or cause it to become more controversial than it should be.

I thank my colleagues, I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 10 minutes.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask the Chair to notify me when I have consumed 8 minutes.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will do so.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I have two items I wish to discuss, one that has already been raised on the floor by my friend, Senator DEMINT, with respect to his proposed amendment No. 573 to the underlying bill. As I understand it, Senator DEMINT will be offering an amendment dealing with the fairness rule. I was a cosponsor of this legislation in the last Congress and I am happy to support it in this Congress; that is, the position that says we should not allow the FCC to reinforce what has been called the fairness rule that was dropped some years ago. Who can be against fairness? Well, I am in favor of fairness, but I am opposed to censorship, under the mislabeling that we have here, the fairness doctrine is nothing more than censorship. The Federal Government would say to a radio or television broadcaster we have determined that the broadcasting that you have been doing is not fair and so you are going to be ordered by the Government to present a different point of view on your show and we will determine whether it is fair or it is not. The fairness doctrine was imposed on the grounds that radio was such a pervasive medium that anything that was said on radio regarding politics should be balanced by someone who holds a different point of view. Right away, this raises the question of how many points of view?

We have seen Presidential elections where we had President Clinton, where we had Pat Buchanan, where we had Ralph Nader, and some minor candidates, and who determines which one is important enough to qualify for a fairness opportunity on radio? According to the so called Fairness Doctrine, the government determines. Who determines, therefore, what is one position that deserves putting down so that other positions can be raised in the name of fairness? The Federal Government. What do we get into when the Federal Government has the authority to make these kinds of decisions? Again, there is a word for it and it is called censorship.

One way to deal with an argument, to use the Latin phrase "reductio ad absurdum," which means "reduce it to an absurdity." Take it to its ultimate end. If we are going to take the Fairness Doctrine to its ultimate end, then we are going to say to the late night comedians, when you make a joke about a Democrat, since you are on the airwaves, you must make a joke of equivalent nastiness about a Republican. When you put down the President, you must find an equivalent Republican figure to put down in the name of fairness. The consequence of all of that, of course, if it were enforced, would be that the late night comedians get shut down all together.

We have already had an opportunity for fairness, if you will, with respect to talk radio. When a group of people got together and financed a liberal talk show host—one who aspires to enter this body at some time—the public spoke. The station went out of business. Let the public decide what they are going to listen to and let the public decide how they are going to pick. There are so many outlets for different points of view that we do not need to go back to the Fairness Doctrine and impose Government censorship on the way people think and respond.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

AMENDMENT NO. 581

Mr. COBURN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside and that amendment No. 581 be called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the amendment.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. COBURN] proposes an amendment numbered 581.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: In the nature of a substitute)

SECTION 1. ELIMINATION OF FEDERAL INCOME TAX FOR RESIDENTS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Due to the unique status of the District of Columbia, created by the Constitution of the United States, bona fide residents of the District (other than Members of Congress) shall, notwithstanding any other provision of law, be exempt from the individual Federal income tax for taxable years beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. President, I know my colleague from New York wishes to speak and I will be very brief. I should not take more than 10 minutes.

We are in a debate about the District of Columbia and the fact that they are taxed and not represented with a vote in the Congress. It is a legitimate debate. I tend to look at the Constitution and, as a matter of fact, as I read the Constitution—and I am not a constitutional lawyer, but I will tell my colleagues that anybody who reads the Constitution can say this is an unconstitutional bill we have in front of us.

I also reject the idea that the District of Columbia does not have representation. All one has to do is look at the facts: $66,000 per resident of the District of Columbia, that is how much money the Federal Government spends per capita in the District of Columbia. That is $5.5 for every dollar they pay in taxes. So the 535 votes in the Congress have well represented them greater than any other group of citizens in the country. But there is a claim—a legitimate claim—that they don't have their own representative and that they are taxed.

This is a simple amendment. What it says is while we work this out, the way to be fair is to eliminate Federal income tax on citizens of the District of Columbia. They don't have a vote. Their tags even say taxation without representation is unfair; no taxation without representation. This solves that. They will have to change all of the auto tags. I don't know what that will cost. But the fact is we will take away Federal income taxes on money earned in the District of Columbia from every citizen of the District of Columbia.

Now, two things happen with that, especially since they have 535 representatives already. Think about what will happen to the District of Columbia in terms of income. Think about what will happen to the District of Columbia in terms of economic progress. Think about what will happen in terms of the value of the ownership of any asset in the District of Columbia. Think of the growth. Think of the modernization that will happen as we make this the center of progress based on the idea that because there is no representation, there should be no Federal taxation. It is a very simple, straightforward amendment. It solves the immediate problem. When we finally do a constitutional amendment with a joint resolution, which we are ultimately going to have to do, what we will have done is given the people of the District of Columbia the benefit of having a tax advantage because they don't have, under their thinking, representation in the Congress.

I am not trying to have a cute vote. If I had my way, I would try to eliminate almost every Federal income tax. As the Senator from New York knows, I try to do that quite often, and try to eliminate a lot of spending. The whole point being, there is a legitimate point to be made by the citizens of the District of Columbia in that they are treated differently than everybody else in this country. My argument is they actually have 535 representatives plus their Delegate, and it has shown to be very effective for them, because no place else in the country gets as much Federal money per capita as the District of Columbia. So if we want to treat the citizens of the District of Columbia fairly—by the way, this excludes all Members of Congress, so if my colleagues are thinking about voting for it for a selfish reason, please don't. If you are thinking about voting for this amendment on the basis of fairness, please consider it.

AMENDMENT NO. 575

I wish to take a few more minutes to comment on the Ensign amendment, if I might, and then I will finish. The Ensign amendment isn't about concealed carrying, it is about the right that is guaranteed under the second amendment to be applied to people in the District of Columbia.

James Madison wrote in Federalist No. 46:

Besides the advantage of being armed, which the Americans possess over the people of almost every other nation . . . forms a barrier against the enterprises of ambition, more insurmountable than any which a simple government of any form can admit of.

If you look at the murder rate in the District of Columbia, what happened when the gun ban in 1975 was first instituted, we didn't see it rise that much because we allowed people to keep their guns. When the complete ban took place, we saw a fivefold rise that is still going up—except for the last 2 years—in the murder rate compared to the rest of the cities in this country. There is something to be said for the thinking that a perpetrator of a felony thinks he or she may possibly be harmed significantly. That tends to drive down violent crime—we know that—in the States that have concealed carry, and that, I believe, is 26 or 28 States. It may be even more than that now.

The fact is, this isn't about concealed carry; this is about guaranteeing the rights of individual citizens in the District of Columbia to represent themselves with a right that every other citizen in this country has. Because Congress didn't act on that right, it took the Heller decision to give them that right. All this does is bring into line the District of Columbia with the rest of the States in the country. I will have taken the amount of time that I should in favor of Senator SCHUMER. I thank him very much for the consideration of allowing me to go first. I thank the chairman of the committee as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to a dangerous amendment that would go far beyond authorizing gun possession for self-defense in the home and create serious threats to public safety, and that is the Ensign amendment.

First, I support the Lieberman bill to bring representation to the District of Columbia, which seems to be in total keeping with what America is all about. I just say to my good friend from Oklahoma that representation, of course, involves dealing with taxation, but it involves many other things. To simply say the people of the District of Columbia don't have to pay any taxes but would be deprived of other rights in these Chambers, to me, is not what this bill is all about. It is a fine bill and a long overdue bill. It is a compromise, obviously. But it is one that moves us up the steps to gaining representation for the hundreds of thousands of the hard-working, taxpaying citizens of the District of Columbia.

Now, of course, we are getting into the sort of season of irrelevant or controversial amendments. The Ensign amendment is certainly the second of those. Let me say this: The Heller case basically said there is an individual right to bear arms. I have some degree of sympathy with those who are in the pro-gun movement who say: Hey, so many Americans look to expand the first amendment, the fourth amendment, and the fifth and sixth amendments broadly, and then see the second amendment through a narrow pinhole, saying that it is only involving militias.

If you believe in a broad and expansive Constitution, how is it that just one of them is perceived as narrow as possible? The Heller decision says it is not just militias that have a right to bear arms, or members of them, but individuals. But every Justice in that case, including Justice Scalia, made the opposite point. Just as those in the pro-gun movement have some justification in saying it is unfair to regard every amendment expansively except the second, those of us who believe more in gun control have the right to say that every amendment has a limitation.

I am a strong believer in the first amendment, but I don't vote against libel laws or pornography laws. I certainly agree with, I believe Oliver Wendell Holmes, who said: You cannot falsely scream fire in a crowded theater. So those are limitations on the first amendment. I say to my friends in the pro-gun movement, if every other amendment has limitations, such as the first, fourth, fifth, sixth—and many on that side of the aisle are for more strict limitations on those amendments than we might be—how is it that the second amendment should not have any limitation?

This proposal by Senator ENSIGN, my friend from Nevada, just shows the absurdity of that argument because there are things in this amendment that people would say defy common sense. It defies common sense to say someone who was voluntarily committed to a mental institution should be allowed to get a gun. It defies common sense to say someone who can't pass a sight test should have a right to a gun. It defies common sense to say a 10-year-old has a right to carry a shotgun. Yet in the defense of an overly expansive view of the second amendment, even conceding that it does apply to these individuals, my colleague from Nevada wishes to say those things. Again, how many people in America think if you fail a sight test, you should have a right to a gun? You might say some sight tests are faulty. Well, change the test. How many people would say someone who has been in a mental institution—voluntarily committed—should have the right to have a gun?

This is about Washington, DC, but didn't we learn on the campus of Virginia Tech about the destructive link when mentally ill people are allowed to acquire guns? Wasn't the country in an uproar about that? Yet here, just a few short years later, as parents of those slain students are still mourning, we are about to say in the District of Columbia, a neighboring jurisdiction, if you not just have a mental illness, but it has to be pretty significant if you have been in a mental institution, you should have a right to have a gun.

So all we are trying to do in opposing the Ensign amendment is invoke common sense. We are not getting into the discussion of whether the second amendment applies to individuals or just to those in militias. The Supreme Court has ruled on that. We are saying to our friends, just as they get up on the floor and advocate limitations on every other amendment, it is contradictory to say the second amendment should not have the most reasonable of limitations. There can't be a more reasonable restriction than the requirement that someone be required to see before they are allowed on the streets with a gun. It just doesn't make sense.

One other point: My colleagues on the other side of the aisle tend to advocate for States rights in the broad balance of things. The States should have the ability to make these decisions. It is clear the District of Columbia, with its high crime rate, is not Nevada, Wyoming, or Nebraska. It is clear that firearms cause far more damage in the District of Columbia than they do in many other States. Why shouldn't the citizens of the District of Columbia have the right to determine, within constitutional confines, how those firearms may be used and who may have them? If you are for a State being able to decide so many other policies, and you don't like the encroaching Federal Government, why is it different for guns? I guess that is at the nub of the Ensign amendment, Mr. President.

Somehow the sponsor of this amendment seems to believe that guns are different from everything else. The supporters of this amendment seem to believe that guns are different from everything else—limitations on every other amendment but not the second amendment. States rights is a good thing, but not when it comes to the States' or localities' view to regulate guns. Why is it different?

If you want to cite the Heller case in defense of the individual right to bear arms, the Heller case also says—Justice Scalia—that restrictions on firearms that are reasonable, like bans on mentally ill people having access to guns, are constitutional and could be, and should be, decided by the citizens of Washington, DC.

So this amendment, make no mistake about it, if passed, will lead to needless maiming and deaths. It is a serious amendment; it is not frivolous. It goes way beyond a political statement on an important bill. I hope my colleagues will rise to the occasion and reject it.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON of Florida). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I have a unanimous consent to offer that has been cleared on both sides. It is as follows:

I ask unanimous consent that at 5:45 p.m. today, the Senate proceed to vote in relation to the Coburn amendment No. 581, with the time until then equally divided and controlled between Senators COBURN and LIEBERMAN or their designees, and that no amendment be in order to the Coburn amendment prior to the vote in relation to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to speak for a few minutes or until Senator COBURN arrives, which-ever event occurs earlier.

AMENDMENT NO. 581

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank the Chair.

I rise to speak against Coburn amendment No. 581. I suppose that in part I should say that this amendment, sponsored as it is by an opponent of the underlying bill, accepts one of the major contentions we are making about the inequity of the current situation, which is that the 600,000 residents of the District of Columbia, uniquely among all Americans, do not have voting representation in Congress. Nonetheless, they are taxed. I mean, this goes back to one of the early American Revolutionary slogans or principles, which is "taxation without representation is tyranny." Our proposal, S. 160, the House Voting Rights Act, responds to that inequity by providing for voting representation in the House of Representatives for the District of Columbia. The Coburn amendment takes the opposite view and says that since the District does not have representation, well, by God, they should not be subject to taxation. So it would eliminate the Federal tax. This amendment would eliminate Federal taxes for DC residents. But that is not what DC residents are asking or we are offering on their behalf. I mean, the point of this is that residents of the District of Columbia do pay taxes. They pay higher per capita taxes to the Federal Government than any other entity but one. They are second highest, approximately $20 billion a year.

Second, they not only have been conscripted into our military services, but since the Volunteer Army, they have volunteered. Residents of this District have not only served, but they have sacrificed their lives in the cause of American security and freedom.

So the point is that there is something very, I hope, inspiring about this. The residents of the District of Columbia are not asking for any free ride. They want to be contributors to America in every way, including Federal taxation, but they also expect to be represented in the House of Representatives with a voting Representative. So on behalf of what I would describe as the patriotic citizens of the District of Columbia, I would say this amendment makes a point, but it is not a sound or fair one.

I polled the members of my staff who live in the District of Columbia to ask how they would advise me to vote. I am pleased to say that they put principle ahead of personal interests and have urged me to vote against this amendment.

I also say that if the amendment passed, we would have yet another enormous gap, and this gap we now have between Federal expenditures and revenues would grow even larger.

So perhaps Senator COBURN is making a point, but it is not one that I believe we ought to adopt in an amendment; therefore, I would urge my colleagues to oppose the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I would like to ask my colleague from Connecticut a question or two about this. First of all, I think it is correct that all of us would like to see a way, a proper way—and we disagree about what that way is—for the residents of the District of Columbia to have a full franchise in terms of congressional representation. Failing that, I think Senator COBURN was simply saying they should not have to pay taxes.

I was wondering myself about potentially a second-degree amendment that might give that option to other States or congressional districts on the theory that maybe this would be a two-fer for their constituents: they could vote to get rid of their Congressman and the income tax. I wonder if my colleague would have an idea about such an amendment.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. To my friend from Arizona, I do have some ideas about such an amendment, but I guess it would be best to not verbalize them on the floor.

Actually, we are at a time in our history, difficult as it is economically, where I think people are turning to the Federal Government and asking for not such a free ride but asking for help. There is a wonderful word; I do not know if it is in the dictionary; the word is "deviltry." It is another way to say mischievous or mischief.

I think our friend from Oklahoma may be up to a little deviltry with this amendment.

Mr. KYL. I think the Senator from Connecticut is probably right about that. His point is to draw an important distinction, and that is that there are two elements to this, one being the taxation and the other the representation. The Senator from Connecticut rightly points to a very important episode in our history where the Founding Fathers tied those two together. There are other factors as well.

I urge support for the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the question is on agreeing to amendment No. 581 offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be.

The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. I announce that the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURRIS). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

NOT VOTING—1

Kennedy

The amendment (No. 581) was rejected.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, as chairman of the District of Columbia subcommittee, I rise today in support of S. 160, the District of Columbia Voting Rights Act of 2009. I vote to enfranchise thousands of District residents and to affirm my commitment to the fundamental right of all Americans to participate in our great democracy.

Despite our Nation's founding principle of "no taxation without representation," District of Columbia residents lack full representation in Congress. They have sent sons and daughters to war in defense of our country, and they have paid Federal taxes in support of our Government. Despite this, the distinguished Delegate from the District of Columbia lacks a vote on the floor of the House of Representatives.

Fair voting representation is fundamental to our democracy. I understand the challenges facing the District's residents, and I sympathize with its trouble to attain voting representation in Congress. I also understand that this will be an ongoing discussion. I am sensitive to the concerns raised by my colleagues on the constitutionality of our actions.

Legal scholars have testified before the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee and the Senate Judiciary Committee that Congress does have the constitutional authority to extend a vote to a District Representative in the House. I believe this legislation is constitutional, but ultimately it is the role of the courts to decide.

Our representative democracy is based on the principle that citizens of this country should have a say in the laws that govern this country. If citizens disagree with the laws, they have the power to vote for different representatives. By extending this core principle to the District of Columbia, I believe this bill would be a decisive step forward for the rights of DC residents.

AMENDMENT NO. 575

Now I wish to address the pending Ensign amendment.

Today, we are addressing voting rights. Now is not an appropriate time to cloud the debate with amendments on gun control. Last year, when this gun issue was brought up on the Senate floor before being considered by the committee, I joined 10 of my colleagues in a letter to the majority leader asking that the bill follow Senate procedures and be referred to committee before consideration on the floor.

As the chairman of the subcommittee charged with the oversight of the District of Columbia, I am familiar with the debate on DC's gun policies. Last year, the U.S. Supreme Court in the Heller decision struck down the District of Columbia's gun ban. Since then, the DC City Council has taken necessary steps to comply with the Supreme Court's decision, including the passage of legislation to address issues raised by the ruling. I do not believe any congressional action is needed to help DC comply with the Heller decision, but, more importantly, this is not the appropriate time to consider and vote on this issue.

I am not against gun ownership. I am for self-determination. I strongly encourage my colleagues to give the District of Columbia and its citizens the opportunity to vote on and establish their own rules regarding gun control. It would be ironic if we were to with one hand finally give the people of the District voting representation but on the other hand take away their right to self-determination by forcing them to adopt a gun control policy on which they were unable to vote. I, therefore, urge my colleagues to vote no on the Ensign amendment and all related amendments.

I am proud to lend my support for the underlying bill. I urge my colleagues to vote in support of voting rights for the residents of the District of Columbia and to reject any amendment that would abridge those rights or is not germane to the issue at hand.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I have a unanimous consent agreement to propound which has been cleared on both sides.

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate resumes consideration of S. 160 on Thursday, February 26, the time until 10:30 a.m. be for debate with respect to the Kyl amendment No. 585, with the time equally divided and controlled between Senators KYL and LIEBERMAN or their designees, with no amendment in order to the amendment prior to the vote, and that at 10:30 a.m. the Senate proceed to vote in relation to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank the Chair.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I send a cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on S. 160, the District of Columbia House Voting Rights Act of 2009.

Harry Reid, Richard Durbin, Sheldon Whitehouse, Jeanne Shaheen, Patty Murray, Bernard Sanders, Roland W. Burris, Charles E. Schumer, Debbie Stabenow, Barbara A. Mikulski, Bill Nelson, John F. Kerry, Christopher J. Dodd, Frank R. Lautenberg, Jeff Bingaman, Amy Klobuchar, Robert Menendez, Barbara Boxer.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the mandatory quorum call be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I would like to announce to everyone where we are in regard to this bill. We have been working through the amendments. Senator LIEBERMAN has done a terrific job. I understand there will be a few more that may be offered. We expect to have votes throughout Thursday on pending amendments, and those that are offered on Thursday we are going to try to dispose of those tomorrow.

I filed cloture today, but I hope it isn't necessary to have this cloture vote. However, if necessary, we will look forward to seeing if we can get a consent agreement to have the vote tomorrow; otherwise, we are going to wind up coming in Friday morning. I hope that is not necessary. This is a piece of legislation that has been talked about for a long time. We have had it on the Senate floor before. I think everyone has had the ability to offer whatever they believe is appropriate.

I really express my appreciation for the cooperation of all Members, both Democrats and Republicans, but especially Senator KYL, who did some very good work with Senator LIEBERMAN this afternoon.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we now proceed to a period of morning business with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Mr. LEAHY. When historians look back at the last 8 years, they are going to evaluate one of the most secretive administrations in the history of the United States. Now, the citizens of this country have said we should have change, and we should. But we also know that the past can be prologue unless we set things right.

In the last administration, there was a justification for torture. It presided over the abuse at Abu Ghraib, destroyed tapes of harsh interrogations, and conducted extraordinary renditions that sent people to countries that permit torture during interrogation.

They used the Justice Department, our premiere law enforcement agency, to subvert the intent of congressional statutes, even to subvert nonpartisan prosecutions, and instead to use them in partisan ways to try to affect the outcome of elections. They wrote secret law to give themselves legal cover for these misguided policies, policies that could not withstand scrutiny if brought to light.

Nothing has done more to damage America's standing and moral authority than the revelation that during the last 8 years we abandoned our historic commitment to human rights by repeatedly stretching the law and the bounds of Executive power to authorize torture and cruel treatment.

As President Obama said to Congress and the American people last night, "if we're honest with ourselves, we'll admit that for too long we have not always met" our responsibilities.

Now, the President said that about the economy, but the same holds true here. It is only by understanding how we arrived at this moment that we can move forward. How can we restore our moral leadership and ensure transparent government if we ignore what has happened?

There has been discussion, and in some cases disagreement, on how best to do this. There are some who resist any effort to investigate the misdeeds of the recent past. Indeed, some have tried to extract a devil's bargain from Attorney General Holder, a commitment that he would not prosecute for anything that happened on President Bush's watch. That is a pledge no prosecutor should give, and, to his credit, Eric Holder did not.

There are others who say that regardless of the cost in time, resources, and unity, we have to prosecute these administration officials to lay down a marker. The courts are already considering congressional subpoenas that have been issued and claims of privilege and legal immunities, and they will for some time.

Over my objections, Congress has already passed laws granting immunity to those who facilitated warrantless wiretapping and conducted cruel interrogations. The Department of Justice issued legal opinions justifying these executive branch excesses which, while legally faulty, would undermine attempts to prosecute. A failed attempt to prosecute for this conduct might be the worst result of all if it is seen as justifying abhorrent actions. Given the steps Congress and the executive have already taken to shield this conduct from accountability, that is a possible outcome.

The alternative to these approaches is a middle ground, a middle ground I spoke of at Georgetown University a little over 2 weeks ago. That middle ground would involve the formation of a commission of inquiry dedicated to finding out what happened. Such a commission's objective would be to find the truth. People would be invited to come forward and share their knowledge and experiences, not for the purpose of constructing criminal indictments, but to assemble the facts, to know what happened and to make sure mistakes are not repeated.

I have seen what happened before in prosecutions. We don't find the full truth. We prosecute those at the bottom of the chair of command, but we don't find out what those above did.

While many are focused on whether crimes were committed, it is just as important to learn if significant mistakes were made, regardless of whether they can be proven beyond a reasonable doubt to a unanimous jury to be criminal conduct. We compound the serious mistakes already made if we limit our inquiry to criminal investigations and trials. Moreover, it is easier for prosecutors to net those far down the ladder than those at the top who set the tone and the policies. We do not yet know the full extent of our government's actions in these areas, and we must be sure that an independent review goes beyond the question of whether crimes were committed, to the equally important assessment of whether mistakes were made so we may endeavor not to repeat them. As I have said, we must read the page before we turn it.

Vice President Dick Cheney continues to assert unilaterally that the Bush administration's tactics, including torture, were appropriate and effective. But interested parties' characterizations and self-serving conclusions are not facts and are not the unadulterated truth. We cannot let those be the only voices heard, nor allow their declarations to serve as historical conclusions on such important questions. An independent commission can undertake this broader and fundamental task.

I am talking about this process with others in Congress, with outside groups and experts, and I have begun to discuss this with the White House as well. I am not interested in a commission of inquiry comprised of partisans, intent on advancing partisan conclusions. Rather, we need an independent inquiry that is beyond reproach and outside of partisan politics to pursue and find the truth. Such a commission would focus primarily on the subjects of national security and executive power in the government's counterterrorism effort. We have had successful oversight in some areas, but on these issues, including harsh interrogation tactics, extraordinary rendition and executive override of the laws, the last administration successfully kept many of us in the dark about what happened and why.

President Obama issued significant executive orders in his first days in office, looking to close Guantanamo and secret prisons, banning the use of harsh interrogation techniques and forming task forces to review our detainee and interrogation policies. I support his decisions, and I am greatly encouraged by his determination to do the hard work to determine how we can reform policies in these areas to be lawful, effective and consistent with American values. My proposal for a commission of inquiry would address the rest of the picture, which is to understand how these types of policies were formed and exercised in the last administration, to ensure that mistakes are not repeated. I am open to good ideas from all sides as to the best way to set up such a commission and to define its scope and goals.

A recent Gallup poll showed that 62 percent of Americans favor an investigation of these very issues. Respected groups including Human Rights First, the Constitution Project and thoughtful Senators, including Senator WHITEHOUSE and Senator FEINGOLD, have also embraced this idea. The determination to look beyond the veil that has so carefully concealed the decision making in these areas is growing. Next Wednesday, the Judiciary Committee will hold a hearing to explore these ideas and to continue the conversation about what we can do moving forward.

Two years ago I described the scandals at the Bush-Cheney-Gonzales Justice Department as the worst since Watergate. They were. We are still digging out from the debris they left behind while those in the last administration continue to defend their policies, knowing full well that we do not even know the full extent of what those policies were or how they were made. We cannot be afraid to understand what we have done if we are to remain a nation equally vigilant in defending both our national security and our Constitution. I hope all Members of Congress will give serious consideration to these difficult questions.

I argue it will be the quintessential American thing to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Mr. President, during my brief tenure so far in the Senate, the Judiciary Committee has confronted many difficult issues, battles over judicial nominees, complex legislative matters, a historic investigation into misdeeds of the Bush administration's Department of Justice. In that process, the committee saw U.S. attorneys fired for political reasons, the Civil Rights Division run amok, declassified legal theories asserting that the President can secretly ignore his own executive orders. We saw unprecedented politicization of a noble department, and we saw those Office of Legal Counsel memos approving interrogation techniques long understood, long known to be torture. Fortunately, throughout that time, Chairman LEAHY sought answers. His efforts were evenhanded but unyielding. We know so much of what we know now because PATRICK LEAHY was satisfied with nothing less than the whole truth.

Today his work continues, and I wish to speak in support of his efforts. The backdrop is, of course, a grim one. Over and over, as I travel around my State of Rhode Island, I hear from people facing challenges that seem almost insurmountable, challenges President Obama spoke about in his address to Congress last evening. Every day it gets harder and harder to find a job, to pay the bills, to make ends meet. Every day it seems more difficult to see a way out. The Bush administration left our country deeply in debt, bleeding jobs overseas, our financial institutions rotten and weakened and an economy in free-fall. This is the wreckage we see everywhere, in shuttered plants, as my colleague from Pennsylvania sees at home so cruelly, in long lines, and in worried faces. But there is also the damage we cannot see so well, the damage below the water line of our democracy, damage caused by a systematic effort to twist policy to suit political ends; to substitute ideology for science, fact, and law; and to misuse instruments of power.

If an administration rigged the intelligence process and, on faulty intelligence, sent our country to war, if an administration descended to interrogation techniques of the Inquisition, of Pol Pot and the Khmer Rouge, descended to techniques that we have prosecuted as crimes in military tribunals and in Federal courts, if institutions as noble as the Department of Justice and as vital as the Environmental Protection Agency were subverted by their own leaders, if the integrity of our markets and the fiscal security of our budget were open wide to the frenzied greed of corporations and speculators and contractors, if taxpayers were cheated and the forces of Government rode to the rescue of the cheaters and punished the whistleblowers, if our Government turned the guns of official secrecy against our own people to mislead, confuse, and propagandize them, if the integrity of public officials, the warnings of science, the honesty of Government procedures and the careful historic balance of our separated powers all were seen as obstacles to be overcome and not attributes to be celebrated, if the purpose of Government became no longer to solve problems but simply to work them for political advantage, and a bodyguard of lies and jargon and propaganda was emitted to fool and beguile the American people, something very serious would have gone wrong in our country.

Such damage must be repaired. I submit that as we begin the task of rebuilding this Nation, we have a duty to our country to determine how great that damage is. Democracy is not a static institution. It is a living education, an ongoing education in freedom of a people.

As Harry Truman said, addressing a joint session of Congress back in 1947:

One of the chief virtues of a democracy is that its defects are always visible, and under democratic processes can be pointed out and corrected.

We have to learn the lessons from this past carnival of folly, greed, lies, and wrongdoing so the damage can, under democratic processes, be pointed out and corrected. If we bind ourselves to this history, we deny ourselves its lessons, lessons that came at too painful a cost to ignore.

Those lessons merit disclosure and discussion. Indeed, disclosure and discussion makes the difference between this history being a valuable lesson for the bright and upward forces of our democracy or a blueprint for those darker forces to return and someday do it all over again. As we work toward a brighter future ahead, to days when jobs return to our cities, capital to our businesses, and security to our lives, we cannot set aside our responsibility to take an accounting of where we are, what was done, and what must now be repaired. We also have to brace ourselves for the realistic possibility that as some of this conduct is exposed, we and the world will find it shameful, revolting. We may have to face the prospect of looking with horror at our own country's deeds.

We are optimists, we Americans. We are proud of our country. Contrition comes hard to us. But the path back from the dark side may lead us down some unfamiliar valleys of remorse and repugnance before we can return to the light. We may have to face our fellow Americans saying to us: No, please, tell us we did not do that, tell us Americans did not do that. And we will have to explain somehow.

This is no small feat and not easy. This will not be comfortable or proud, but somehow it must be done.

Chairman LEAHY has embarked on the process of considering a new commission, one appropriate to the task of investigating the damage the Bush administration did to America, to her finest traditions and institutions, to her reputation and integrity. The hearing he has called in coming days will more thoroughly examine this question to help us determine how best to move forward. I stand with him. Before we can repair the harm of the last 8 years, we must learn the truth.

REMEMBERING LARRY H. MILLER

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I wish to speak of one of Utah's most outstanding citizens, Larry H. Miller, who passed away recently.

Larry Miller is a true American success story. He graduated from high school. He wasn't able to cut it in college and ended up working in a parts department in an auto dealership. Not a very auspicious beginning for someone who became a billionaire, but Larry Miller had two things that many people do not have. No. 1, he had in effect a photographic memory. I understand that if you went to Larry Miller while he was running this parts department and asked for an axle or for a head lamp or for any other auto part, he knew exactly where it was. Somehow he had that in his head and he made a tremendous success out of that. He ultimately began his career by buying an auto dealership and then built a string of 40 auto dealerships.

The other thing he had was an incredible work ethic. Larry Miller worked hard every day and demanded that kind of performance from those who worked with him.

He is best known in Utah for the fact that he was the minority owner of the Utah Jazz, the NBA's least successful team financially. The Jazz reached the point where they had to be sold because they couldn't survive anymore. They were losing money at every turn. The majority partner made a deal whereby the franchise would be sold to someone outside of the State. As minority partner, Larry Miller was required to sign the deal. He picked up the pen to sign the deal and then he couldn't bring himself to sign it, and he turned to the majority partner and said, Sam, I can't do it. So he bought the majority partner out, kept the Jazz in Utah, and then he presided over the revival of the Jazz. They won more games. They have been in the playoffs more than most people. They have been to the national finals twice and the only reason they haven't won an NBA national championship is because the Chicago Bulls had Michael Jordan at the time. Against any other team or any other star, the Jazz would have won the NBA championship. I remember the last failed game very well, and the shot Jordan put up that won the game that was fantastic, but that was Jordan's legacy.

Larry Miller is known for all of these things, but that is not how I wish to remember him before the Senate here today, because this man, who was a philanthropist and gave his money to community colleges to help people who were more like him in terms of their academic needs, became in his later years a history buff. He fell in love with the Founding Fathers. I remember talking to Larry Miller about John Adams, about Thomas Jefferson, and recommending a book to him. He had just read McCullough's book on John Adams and I said, Have you read Joseph Ellis's book, "Founding Brothers"? He said, no. I said, I will send it to you. I got caught up in all of my difficulties and all of my distractions and realized I had failed to keep my word. So finally, with some embarrassment, I got hold of Larry and said, I apologize I have not sent you a copy of "Founding Brothers." He said, that is all right, Senator. I went out and bought one on my own. He followed through where I didn't.

He fell in love with this country, not as an entrepreneur, although he did that way; not as someone who had been very successful and blessed by this country, although he did that way; but toward the end of his life he fell in love with this country as one who studied its history and understood its underpinnings. He was generous. He was inventive. He was tenacious. The people of Utah have been more than blessed by the fact that he chose Utah as his home. We miss him terribly and extend our deepest sympathies to his family.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING RULES OF PROCEDURE

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the rules of procedure for the Special Committee on Aging printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING—JURISDICTION AND AUTHORITY

S. Res. 4, §104, 95th Congress, 1st Session (1977)

(a)(1) There is established a Special Committee on Aging (hereafter in this section referred to as the "special committee") which shall consist of nineteen Members. No proposed legislation shall be referred to such committee, and such committee shall not have power to report by bill, or otherwise have legislative jurisdiction.

(2) The special committee shall, from time to time (but not less than once a year), report to the Senate the results of the study conducted pursuant to paragraph (1), together with such recommendation as it considers appropriate.

take depositions and other testimony, (H) to procure the serve of individual consultants or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(I) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended) and (I) with the prior consent of the Government department or agency concerned and the Committee on Rules and Administration, to use on a reimbursable basis the services of personnel of any such department or agency.

(2) The chairman of the special committee or any Member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

(3) Subpoenas authorized by the special committee may be issued over the signature of the chairman, or any Member of the special committee designated by the chairman, and may be served by any person designated by the chairman or the Member signing the subpoena.

(d) All records and papers of the temporary Special Committee on Aging established by Senate Resolution 33, Eighty-seventh Congress, are transferred to the special committee.

RULES OF PROCEDURE

I. CONVENING OF MEETINGS

1. Meetings. The Committee shall meet to conduct Committee business at the call of the Chairman. The Members of the Committee may call additional meetings as provided in Senate Rule XXVI (3).

2. Notice and Agenda:

(a) Written Notice. The Chairman shall give the Members written notice of any Committee meeting, accompanied by an agenda enumerating the items of business to be considered, at least 5 days in advance of such meeting.

(b) Shortened Notice. A meeting may be called on not less than 24 hours notice if the Chairman, with the concurrence of the Ranking Minority Member, determines that there is good cause to begin the meeting on shortened notice. An agenda will be furnished prior to such a meeting.

3. Presiding Officer. The Chairman shall preside when present. If the Chairman is not present at any meeting, the Ranking Majority Member present shall preside.

II. CONVENING OF HEARINGS

1. Notice. The Committee shall make public announcement of the date, place and subject matter of any hearing at least one week before its commencement. A hearing may be called on not less than 24 hours notice if the Chairman, with the concurrence of the Ranking Minority Member, determines that there is good cause to begin the hearing on shortened notice.

2. Presiding Officer. The Chairman shall preside over the conduct of a hearing when present; or, whether present or not, may delegate authority to preside to any Member of the Committee.

3. Witnesses. Witnesses called before the Committee shall be given, absent extraordinary circumstances, at least forty-eight hours notice, and all witnesses called shall be furnished with a copy of these rules upon request.

4. Oath. All witnesses who testify to matters of fact shall be sworn unless the Committee waives the oath. The Chairman, or any Member, may request and administer the oath.

5. Testimony. At least 72 hours in advance of a hearing, each witness who is to appear before the Committee shall submit his or her testimony by way of electronic mail, in a format determined by the Committee and sent to an electronic mail address specified by the Committee, unless the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member determine that there is good cause for a witness's failure to do so. A witness shall be allowed no more than ten minutes to orally summarize his or her prepared statement. Officials of the federal government shall file 100 copies of such statement with the clerk of the Committee 72 hours in advance of their appearance, unless the Chairman and the Ranking Minority Member determine there is good cause for noncompliance.

6. Counsel. A witness's counsel shall be permitted to be present during his testimony at any public or closed hearing or depositions or staff interview to advise such witness of his or her rights, provided, however, that in the case of any witness who is an officer or employee of the government, or of a corporation or association, the Chairman may rule that representation by counsel from the government, corporation, or association creates a conflict of interest, and that the witness shall be represented by personal counsel not from the government, corporation, or association.

7. Transcript. An accurate electronic or stenographic record shall be kept of the testimony of all witnesses in closed sessions and public hearings. Any witness shall be afforded, upon request, the right to review that portion of such record, and for this purpose, a copy of a witness's testimony in public or closed session shall be provided to the witness. Upon inspecting his or her transcript, within a time limit set by the committee clerk, a witness may request changes in testimony to correct errors of transcription, grammatical errors, and obvious errors of fact. The Chairman or a staff officer designated by him shall rule on such request.

8. Impugned Persons. Any person who believes that evidence presented, or comment made by a Member or staff, at a public hearing or at a closed hearing concerning which there have been public reports, tends to impugn his or her character or adversely affect his or her reputation may:

(a) file a sworn statement of facts relevant to the evidence or comment, which shall be placed in the hearing record; and

(b) request the opportunity to appear personally before the Committee to testify in his or her own behalf.

9. Minority Witnesses. Whenever any hearing is conducted by the Committee, the Ranking Member, to call at least one witness to testify or produce documents with respect to the measure or matter under consideration at the hearing. Such request must be made before the completion of the hearing or, if subpoenas are required to call the minority witnesses, no later than three days before the hearing.

10. Conduct of Witnesses, Counsel and Members of the Audience. If, during public or executive sessions, a witness, his or her counsel, or any spectator conducts him or herself in such a manner as to prevent, impede, disrupt, obstruct, or interfere with the orderly administration of such hearing the Chairman or presiding Member of the Committee present during such hearing may request the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, his representative or any law enforcement official to eject said person from the hearing room.

III. CLOSED SESSIONS AND CONFIDENTIAL MATERIALS

1. Procedure. All meetings and hearings shall be open to the public unless closed. To close a meeting or hearing or portion thereof, a motion shall be made and seconded to go into closed discussion of whether the meeting or hearing will concern Committee investigations or matters enumerated in Senate Rule XXVI(5)(b). Immediately after such discussion, the meeting or hearing or portion thereof may be closed by a vote in open session of a majority of the Members of the Committee present.

2. Witness Request. Any witness called for a hearing may submit a written request to the Chairman no later than twenty-four hours in advance for his or her examination to be in closed or open session. The Chairman shall inform the Committee of any such request.

3. Confidential Matter. No record made of a closed session, or material declared confidential by a majority of the Committee, or report of the proceedings of a closed session, shall be made public, in whole or in part or by way of summary, unless specifically authorized by the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member.

IV. BROADCASTING

1. Control. Any meeting or hearing open to the public may be covered by television, radio, or still photography. Such coverage must be conducted in an orderly and unobtrusive manner, and the Chairman may for good cause terminate such coverage in whole or in part, or take such other action to control it as the circumstances may warrant.

2. Request. A witness may request of the Chairman, on grounds of distraction, harassment, personal safety, or physical discomfort, that during his or her testimony cameras, media microphones, and lights shall not be directed at him or her.

V. QUORUMS AND VOTING

1. Reporting. A majority shall constitute a quorum for reporting a resolution, recommendation or report to the Senate.

2. Committee Business. A third shall constitute a quorum for the conduct of Committee business, other than a final vote on reporting, providing a minority Member is present.

3. Hearings. One Member shall constitute a quorum for the receipt of evidence, the swearing of witnesses, and the taking of testimony at hearings.

4. Polling:

(a) Subjects. The Committee may poll (1) internal Committee matters including those concerning the Committee's staff, records, and budget; (2) other Committee business which has been designated for polling at a meeting.

(b) Procedure. The Chairman shall circulate polling sheets to each Member specifying the matter being polled and the time limit for completion of the poll. If any Member so requests in advance of the meeting, the matter shall be held for meeting rather than being polled. The clerk shall keep a record of polls. If the Chairman determines that the polled matter is one of the areas enumerated in Rule III(1), the record of the poll shall be confidential. Any Member may request a Committee meeting following a poll for a vote on the polled decision.

VI. INVESTIGATIONS

1. Authorization for Investigations. All investigations shall be conducted on a bipartisan basis by Committee staff. Investigations may be initiated by the Committee staff upon the approval of the Chairman and the Ranking Minority Member. Staff shall keep the Committee fully informed of the progress of continuing investigations, except where the Chairman and the Ranking Minority Member agree that there exists temporary cause for more limited knowledge.

2. Subpoenas. Subpoenas for the attendance of witnesses or the production of memoranda, documents, records, or any other materials shall be issued by the Chairman, or by any other Member of the Committee designated by him. Prior to the issuance of each subpoena, the Ranking Minority Member, and any other Member so requesting, shall be notified regarding the identity of the person to whom the subpoena will be issued and the nature of the information sought, and its relationship to the investigation.

3. Investigative Reports. All reports containing findings or recommendations stemming from Committee investigations shall be printed only with the approval of a majority of the Members of the Committee.

VII. DEPOSITIONS AND COMMISSIONS

1. Notice. Notices for the taking of depositions in an investigation authorized by the Committee shall be authorized and issued by the Chairman or by a staff officer designated by him. Such notices shall specify a time and place for examination, and the name of the staff officer or officers who will take the deposition. Unless otherwise specified, the deposition shall be in private. The Committee shall not initiate procedures leading to criminal or civil enforcement proceedings for a witness's failure to appear unless the deposition notice was accompanied by a Committee subpoena.

2. Counsel. Witnesses may be accompanied at a deposition by counsel to advise them of their rights, subject to the provisions of Rule II(6).

3. Procedure. Witnesses shall be examined upon oath administered by an individual authorized by local law to administer oaths. Questions shall be propounded orally by Committee staff. Objections by the witnesses as to the form of questions shall be noted by the record. If a witness objects to a question and refuses to testify on the basis of relevance or privilege, the Committee staff may proceed with the deposition, or may at that time or at a subsequent time, seek a ruling by telephone or otherwise on the objection from a Member of the Committee. If the Member overrules the objection, he or she may refer the matter to the Committee or the Member may order and direct the witness to answer the question, but the Committee shall not initiate the procedures leading to civil or criminal enforcement unless the witness refuses to testify after he or she has been ordered and directed to answer by a Member of the Committee.

4. Filing. The Committee staff shall see that the testimony is transcribed or electronically recorded. If it is transcribed, the witness shall be furnished with a copy for review. No later than five days thereafter, the witness shall return a signed copy, and the staff shall enter the changes, if any, requested by the witness in accordance with Rule II(7). If the witness fails to return a signed copy, the staff shall note on the transcript the date a copy was provided and the failure to return it. The individual administering the oath shall certify on the transcript that the witness was duly sworn in his or her presence, the transcriber shall certify that the transcript is a true record to the testimony, and the transcript shall then be filed with the Committee clerk. Committee staff may stipulate with the witness to changes in this procedure; deviations from the procedure which do not substantially impair the reliability of the record shall not relieve the witness from his or her obligation to testify truthfully.

5. Commissions. The Committee may authorize the staff, by issuance of commissions, to fill in prepared subpoenas, conduct field hearings, inspect locations, facilities, or systems of records, or otherwise act on behalf of the Committee. Commissions shall be accompanied by instructions from the Committee regulating their use.

VIII. SUBCOMMITTEES

1. Establishment. The Committee will operate as a Committee of the Whole, reserving to itself the right to establish temporary subcommittees at any time by majority vote. The Chairman of the full Committee and the Ranking Minority Member shall be ex officio Members of all subcommittees.

2. Jurisdiction. Within its jurisdiction as described in the Standing Rules of the Senate, each subcommittee is authorized to conduct investigations, including use of subpoenas, depositions, and commissions.

3. Rules. A subcommittee shall be governed by the Committee rules, except that its quorum for all business shall be one-third of the subcommittee Membership, and for hearings shall be one Member.

IX. REPORTS

Committee reports incorporating Committee findings and recommendations shall be printed only with the prior approval of a majority of the Committee, after an adequate period for review and comment. The printing, as Committee documents, of materials prepared by staff for informational purposes, or the printing of materials not originating with the Committee or staff, shall require prior consultation with the minority staff; these publications shall have the following language printed on the cover of the document: "Note: This document has been printed for informational purposes. It does not represent either findings or recommendations formally adopted by the Committee."

X. AMENDMENT OF RULES

The rules of the Committee may be amended or revised at any time, provided that not less than a majority of the Committee present so determine at a Committee meeting preceded by at least 3 days notice of the amendments or revisions proposed.

COMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT OF GOVERNMENT MANAGEMENT, THE FEDERAL WORKFORCE, AND THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA RULES OF PROCEDURE

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, Senate Standing Rules XXVI requires each committee to adopt rules to govern the procedure of the committee and to publish those rules in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD not later than March 1 of the first year of each Congress. On February 24, 2009, a majority of the members of the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs' Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management, the Federal Workforce, and the District of Columbia adopted subcommittee Rules of Procedure.

Consistent with Standing Rule XXVI, today I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a copy of the rules of procedure of the Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management, the Federal Workforce, and the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RULES OF PROCEDURE OF THE COMMITTEE ON HOMELAND SECURITY AND GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT OF GOVERNMENT MANAGEMENT, THE FEDERAL WORKFORCE, AND THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

(1) Subcommittee Rules.—The Subcommittee shall be governed, where applicable, by the rules of the full Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs and the Standing Rules of the Senate.

(2) Quorums.

(A) Transaction of Routine Business.—One-third of the membership of the Subcommittee shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of routine business, provided that one Member of the Minority is present. For the purpose of this paragraph, the term "routine business" includes the convening of a meeting and the consideration of any business of the Subcommittee other than reporting to the full Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs any measures, matters or recommendations.

(B) Taking Testimony.—One Member of the Subcommittee shall constitute a quorum for taking sworn or unsworn testimony.

(C) Proxies Prohibited in Establishment of Quorum.—Proxies shall not be considered for the establishment of a quorum.

(3) Subcommittee Subpoenas.—The Chairman of the Subcommittee, with the approval of the Ranking Minority Member of the Subcommittee, is authorized to subpoena the attendance of witnesses or the production of memoranda, documents, records, or any other materials at a hearing, provided that the Chairman may subpoena attendance or production without the approval of the Ranking Minority Member where the Chairman or a staff officer designated by him/her has not received notification from the Ranking Minority Member or a staff officer designated by him/her of disapproval of the subpoena within 72 hours, excluding Saturdays and Sundays, of being notified of the subpoena. If a subpoena is disapproved by the Ranking Minority Member as provided herein, the subpoena may be authorized by vote of the Members of the Subcommittee.

Immediately upon authorization of the issuance of a subpoena under these rules, a written notice of intent to issue the subpoena shall be provided to the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the full Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs, or staff officers designated by them, by the Subcommittee Chairman or a staff officer designated by him/her, and no subpoena shall be issued for at least 48 hours, excluding Saturdays and Sundays, from delivery to the appropriate offices, unless the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the full Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs waive the 48-hour waiting period or unless the Subcommittee Chairman certifies in writing to the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the full Committee that, in his or her opinion, it is necessary to issue a subpoena immediately.

When the Subcommittee or its Chairman authorizes subpoenas, subpoenas may be issued upon the signature of the Chairman or any other Member of the Subcommittee designated by the Chairman.

NATIONAL PEACE CORPS WEEK

Mrs. SHAHEEN. Mr. President, I rise today in celebration of National Peace Corps Week and in honor of the thousands of Americans who serve throughout the world as Peace Corps volunteers.

Since the Peace Corps' founding in 1961 by President John F. Kennedy, over 195,000 U.S. citizens have chosen to serve their country as Peace Corps volunteers. Today, nearly 8,000 Peace Corps volunteers serve abroad in 76 different countries.

In my own home State of New Hampshire, 54 volunteers have heard the call and are currently devoting their time, energy, and lives to fulfilling the vision of President Kennedy and serving their country abroad in the cause of peace. They are placed throughout the developing world—from Morocco, where one New Hampshire volunteer is educating community leaders on improving access to safe drinking water, to Macedonia, where another is teaching English to grade school children in a small rural village.

I would like to take a second and recognize each of these citizen ambassadors and the nearly 1,500 Peace Corps volunteers from New Hampshire that have served since 1961. In honor of their efforts, I will ask consent that the attached list of current New Hampshire volunteers be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. New Hampshire is proud of your service, and we will continue to stand solidly behind you.

The Peace Corps was founded on the ideal that each of us has the responsibility to serve our country and leave our world in a better place than we found it. This dual commitment to U.S. interests and the global good is a testament to the fact that in today's interconnected world, American security and prosperity are inextricably linked to the security and prosperity of people residing in the far corners of our globe. Peace Corps volunteers understand better than anyone that we are truly all in this together.

Peace Corps volunteers work on the front lines in our battle for hearts and minds throughout the world. They serve as teachers, business professionals, health educators, management specialists, information technology advisors, mentors and friends to citizens across the globe. These unofficial ambassadors help develop trust and establish relationships that are critical to American influence and global stability. Upon the completion of their service abroad, these volunteers then return home to promote a better understanding here in America of the culture, language and viewpoint of those they have served.

These volunteers have all done their part to make the world a better place and, in turn, have contributed a great deal to U.S. national interests and global security. In our 21st century world, where the threats and challenges that confront America and the global community cannot be overcome by the might of our military alone, Peace Corps volunteers are laying the foundation for a more secure and prosperous world.

In honor of National Peace Corps Week and in celebration of the Peace Corps' 48th Anniversary on March 1, 2009, I would like to recognize those volunteers from New Hampshire, as well as all past and current Peace Corps volunteers, for their commitment to securing a better world for us and our children.

As a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the chair of the Foreign Relations Subcommittee on European Affairs, I will work with our allies and friends throughout the world in the development of an American foreign policy that matches the passion and commitment to service of our Peace Corps volunteers abroad.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the list of current New Hampshire volunteers to which I referred printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HUMAN RIGHTS IN KENYA

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, during the past year, I and other Senators have urged the Government of Kenya to effectively address reports of egregious misconduct by its police and military forces, including torture and summary executions. The Mount Elgon killings, culminating in the slaughter of some 200 people by the police and army soldiers in 2008, were particularly appalling, yet the government has yet to conduct a credible, transparent, thorough investigation.

We now have the report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur, which confirms, again, the conclusions of multiple human rights organizations. I would hope that the Government of Kenya recognizes that it is in its interest, and that it has a responsibility, to promptly implement the Special Rapporteur's recommendations.

Kenya is an ally and friend of the United States. In fact, we are training some of Kenya's security forces. It is imperative that these violations be addressed urgently and decisively, and that the individuals involved in these atrocities, including those who gave the orders, are brought to justice.

I ask unanimous consent that a press release on the Special Rapporteur's report be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

From the Press Center—U.N. Headquarters

NAIROBI, February 25, 2009.—Today, the UN Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial executions, Mr. Philip Alston, concluded his 16-25 February 2009 fact-finding mission to Kenya.

The UN independent expert stated that, "Killings by police in Kenya are systematic, widespread and carefully planned. They are committed at will and with utter impunity." He also found that death squads were set up upon the orders of senior police officials to exterminate the Mungiki.

He called on the President of Kenya to acknowledge the widespread problem of extrajudicial executions in Kenya and to commit to systemic reform. "Effective leadership on this issue can only come from the very top, and sweeping reforms to the policing sector should begin with the immediate dismissal of the Police Commissioner," concluded the independent expert. "Further, given his role in encouraging the impunity that exists in Kenya, the Attorney-General should resign so that the integrity of the office can be restored."

In addition, the Special Rapporteur found compelling evidence that in Mt Elgon, the police and military committed organised torture and extrajudicial executions against civilians during their 2008 operation to flush out the Sabaot Land Defence Force militia. "For two years, the SLDF militia terrorized the population and the Government did far too little. And when the Government did finally act, they responded with their own form of terror and brutality, killing over 200 people." He said that since the security forces had not investigated the allegations in any convincing manner "the Government should immediately act to set up an independent commission for Mount Elgon, modeled on the Waki Commission".

With respect to the accountability for the post-election violence, the Special Rapporteur stated that the setting up of the Special Tribunal for Kenya was "absolutely indispensable to ensure that Kenya does not again descend into chaos during the 2012 elections." He called on civil society and the international community to take a firm line on its establishment. "At the same time, this is an ideal case for the ICC to urgently take up", he added, stressing that the two approaches were not mutually exclusive and a two-track approach should be adopted.

The Special Rapporteur also recommended that an independent civilian police oversight body be established, that records of police killings be centralized, that an independent Department of Public Prosecutions be created, across-the-board vetting of the police be undertaken, the setting up of an independent witness protection program, that the Government issue substantive responses to KNCHR reports, and compensation for the victims of those unlawfully killed.

In the course of his ten-day visit, the Special Rapporteur visited Nairobi, Central, Rift Valley, Western and Nyanza Provinces. He conducted in-depth private interviews with more than one hundred victims and witnesses. Mr. Alston met with senior Government officials, including the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice, the Assistant Minister of Defence, the Chief of Police and the Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces, as well as officials at the provincial and district levels. He also met with the Kenya National Commission on Human Rights, the independent national human rights institution, as well as with civil society organizations.

TRIBUTE TO LEON FLEISHER

Mr. AHY. Mr. President, this week, one of the indomitable artists of our age will take the stage of the Kennedy Center Concert Hall, as the great pianist Leon Fleisher teams up with the London Philharmonic Orchestra. His range, commanding technique and total sense of the music's natural shape and scope will surely captivate the audience. This is a fitting occasion to take note of a great artist, teacher and humanitarian who, through his playing, has touched the souls of so many.

In the early years of his career, Leon Fleisher astounded audiences with a golden sound. His career then seemed tragically cut short when he began suffering from a rare neurological condition that rendered his right hand unable to play. Instead of withdrawing from the musical world, Leon Fleisher remained in close contact with music through conducting, teaching and playing scores specially written for pianists who lost use of their right hands. He persisted in the effort to play the full concert repertoire, and some novel medical treatments eventually helped him regain full use of both hands.

It is a classic American journey, tracing a path out of despair to triumph. In Leon Fleisher's sense of determination, dedication, vision and skill, there is much for all of us to both admire and emulate. My wife Marcelle and I were delighted to sit next to him at a reception that honored his lifetime of achievement. We thoroughly enjoyed getting to know this stately and cordial artist, a man of great intelligence, modesty and warmth.

Leon Fleisher has been playing across the country with full use of his hands for several years now. We are fortunate to be able to hear again how he plumbs the depths of every musical score, revealing something about ourselves through his music making. I know the Senate joins me in congratulating and recognizing Leon Fleisher's incredible contributions to the vibrant cultural fabric of our country.

IDAHOANS SPEAK OUT ON HIGH ENERGY PRICES

Mr. CRAPO. Mr. President, in mid-June, I asked Idahoans to share with me how high energy prices are affecting their lives, and they responded by the hundreds. The stories, numbering well over 1,200, are heartbreaking and touching. While energy prices have dropped in recent weeks, the concerns expressed remain very relevant. To respect the efforts of those who took the opportunity to share their thoughts, I am submitting every e-mail sent to me through an address set up specifically for this purpose to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. This is not an issue that will be easily resolved, but it is one that deserves immediate and serious attention, and Idahoans deserve to be heard. Their stories not only detail their struggles to meet everyday expenses, but also have suggestions and recommendations as to what Congress can do now to tackle this problem and find solutions that last beyond today. I ask unanimous consent to have today's letters printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

My husband and I are semi retired but the figure of $200 way off the mark even for us. We do work part of the year but are not doing so at this time. We live rural and have to travel for groceries, building supplies. When we work all of this involves a minimum of 40 miles each way, not including the around town mileage. We have 20 acres, with a small tractor to keep weeds under control which the county urges all of us to do. We also have a large lawn to mow. Our fuel bill for the month of May was $400. The tractor has a tank of 10 gallons, and that alone costs $40 per tank. We are trying to save a bit by purchasing dyed fuel but, by the time you travel to that, you have eaten up your savings. The point is we have very little choice on our fuel issues. We do not go to town on a whim and really never have as long as we have been here (since 1973). The price of food is skyrocketing also in the rural areas. We have a small grocery store in a small town by us, but they have fuel issues, too. We would like to see nuclear power sources and wind generators multiply. Our daughter does websites and she has a customer that has a wind power source for sale for each single home. However, at this point, it is somewhat expensive, approximately $5,500. Although in the past, nuclear power has had a few hiccups so even we were not in favor of it. I subscribe to Popular Science Magazine and it is my understanding they are very close or have reached the ability to neutralize the waste. However, I have not heard any news about it from the media or official science reports.

Fixed income as well as families and singles cannot get pay raises that equals the cost of living in reality. We dealt with this our last years at work. Companies have their stockholders that have to be kept and for the last eight years of our jobs we steadily lost money from cost of living that the government adjusted to be 3% or less when in the blue collar world did not equate to that. Fuel alone doubled and what cost us $30 per week for work fuel jumped within 3 months to $60 per week and kept traveling upward since. Property taxes, auto and home insurance also have risen but employers went with the government figures. I would get 25 cent per hour raise. It brought home approximately $4 and change per week. It did not cover any of our rising expenses. Anything under $1.00 does not even show anything much on a take home check. So there needs to be some way for an employer with all their overheads to realize this and perhaps hire CEOs, CFOs and other company officials that make a decent wage without the super perks they have received for the last 25 years. Corporate waste is rampant and should be addressed somehow in the near future so the frontline employees can afford today's fuel prices and not be stressed daily by how to make ends meet. Sorry I got off the edge here but it is all one big picture which is why the energy costs are a frontline problem with this. We still have many elderly people who do not have enough to live as is. With this energy impact, I do not know how they can make it. So please keep up your vigil. We need to open up the fields in Alaska and not be selling it to other countries at this point. [When] my husband and I work, which involves truck driving, we see what is happening along the routes we travel. The distress in the citizens and the oil wells being developed and the ones that are not running.

DARLENE, Spirit Lake.

Thank you for the opportunity to communicate in this fashion my family's challenges with the high cost of energy and our thoughts. I travel a great deal all over America and, as part of my job, I work closely with many convenience store operators around our great country. We own a Dodge Durango 4-wheel drive SUV. It is great because it provides the safety my family needs during the winter and the space we need for all the stuff we need to transport when you have two young children. As you no doubt remember with your own family, a nine-month-old baby [needs] a lot of baggage when he travels—car seats, strollers, etc. The daughter wants her bike when visiting the grandparents, her books, and spare clothes, etc. The bad thing is it only gets 13 miles to the gallon on average and, like most families, we did not buy it with cash but financed it which means we owe more on it than we can sell it for. In fact, in this market, many car dealers will not even take an SUV in on trade. So we have no choice but to bear the burden of high gas prices for the foreseeable future. We cannot just throw the car away and run out and buy a new fuel-efficient SUV which is selling at a premium that, frankly, even in today's market, does not even pencil out as a good investment by my calculations. Of course, this is not the only part of the story of how high energy costs have impacted our family but the part those like Thomas Freidman never take into consideration when promoting even higher costs through taxation, cap and trade, and government manipulation of the market.

What should Congress do?

Do not do as Congresswoman Maxine Waters suggested in Committee and take over the oil companies. The markets are working just fine, but what they reflect is all the inaction and obstacles that have burdened the supply and demand elasticity of the commodities markets be it oil or corn, etc.

Again, taxing is not a solution. We should be working to lower taxes for everyone. Not redistributing it. Not to manipulate markets. Fuel taxes should be what they need to be to maintain our infrastructure. We should be encouraging efficiencies in the market place with our tax code and policies.

The fact is we need to make it easier to drill now. We need to make it easier to refine more fuel now. We need to add capacity to distribute that fuel to the marketplace now. We need to expand our reserves so we have a cushion when natural disasters occur. We need to do something about all the boutique fuels that cause unnatural shortages every spring and fall (winter blend, summer blend, smog blend, this blend, that blend impact refinery efficiency). We need to do something about credit card interchange fees. We need to do everything we can to encourage efficiency.

And, of course, we need to encourage conservation, public transportation where possible, more not less airports and routes, and alternative even renewable sources of energy.

Well, that is my 415 cents. Thank you.

ROBERT, Twin Falls.

I find it odd as the greatest country in the world we are lagging in becoming energy self-sufficient. France, for instance, runs and has, for many years, ran its country off nuclear power. How is it that we cannot do this? If our country was powered off of nuclear power, consider the substantial reduction in oil consumption for the east coast. They are paying to heat their houses with heating oil, more expensive than our natural gas. Drilling for more oil will help but we need a bigger and better solution. Corn is not the answer, either. As the government pushes alternative fuels (ethanol), the price of food rises. Also we do not get the power out of ethanol that we get out of traditional fuel so MPG on our cars drop. So we need more ethanol. It is a very ridiculous cycle. Nuclear, wind, hydrogen, oil—all these options need to be brought to the table now. Waiting until after the election will not work. We all know as soon as that election is over the focus will be on mid-term elections and pandering to voters. Let us get it done now. Does our government really care about our future, our children? Let us act on this now before these same promises are being made to our children's children.

UNSIGNED.

It is time that we get off our cans and get aggressive in drilling for oil on our own soil. I am tired of our country being held hostage to foreign interests and values when it comes to our own energy needs. High fuel costs have had a significant negative effect on my business and my ability to grow my business. Please do all you can to get us out of this crisis.

CRAIG, Eagle.

It is time to reign in the market speculation in oil and it is products. There is no shortage of gasoline or oil. There are no lines at gas stations! It is gouging, plain and simple. Stop protecting the oil companies! Windfall profits tax on all oil-related products of at least 50%. Apply the windfall tax funds to alternative energy research that have no connection to the oil industry. Make it a modern day Apollo project. Repeal oil industry tax breaks. Apply a 100% tax rate on any salary over 10 million per year.

The economy is collapsing while [the Administration does nothing]. We own a small business; we want support for the middle class. The rich need no help; let them earn a living for a change.

MIKE, Moscow.

I am glad to see someone taking a stand that actually has a chance to be heard. I am glad that we are going to try and get some relief to the gas prices, but I think we should also be looking into the contributing factors that are causing such a demand for fuel.

I live in Meridian and must commute to Boise every day for my job. I confronted my employer (a local utility company) regarding other options to having to commute to Boise every day when the air quality was getting so bad like 4-day work week, telecommuting, etc. and was told it was not an option. My son is 5 years old and has asthma. Every time the air quality gets bad, so does his health. Recently, with the gigantic increase in fuel prices and the demand of fuel, I confronted my employer again about other options that could not only help with the air quality, but help contribute to decreasing the demand of fuel; again, I was again turned down. To me it seems that not only should we be going after congress to help relieve the outrageous cost of fuel, but we also need someone to tell employers to do what they can to start helping with the problem instead of contributing to it. Thank you for what you are doing and I hope a resolution is on the horizon.

NICHOLE, Meridian.

I received your email asking us to share our stories about high energy costs so here goes. We live 5 miles from the nearest grocery store and town. This means that every time we get in the car, the round trip is a minimum of 10 miles. If my husband and I both go into town a couple of times a day, and only go to the nearest town, we drive a minimum of 40 miles a day and that is without running errands, going to another town or anything like that. When all is said and done, it is much more like 60 miles a day. We also live in snow country and must have 4-wheel drives so get about 15 mpg which means at $4 per gallon, we spend about $16 just to get to town and back which is almost $500 per month. It is insane.

What is more insane is the idea that we can explore and produce our way out of this mess. The US consumes about 26% of the world's oil but only has about 2% of the world's oil reserves. We would have to increase our reserves and production 12 fold to cover today's demand and that is never going to happen. The price of oil shot up when it became clear we were going to invade Iraq—financial markets hate uncertainty and invading another country is a big uncertainty. As the war has dragged on and as our President has talked about taking action against Iran, oil prices have soared higher. The best thing our nation could do to lower the price of oil would be to get out of a country we had no business invading in the first place and start spending more, much much more, on the plentiful wind, solar and geothermal we have been blessed with.

Americans want this, the people of Idaho want this, I only hope Senator Crapo is listening. I ask him to do the only sane thing and think outside the oil box.

LESLIE.

I live with a husband who makes his money his. When I had a job, I had an income and contributed to the groceries. It has already been hard for me because I had been on medical leave for over a year from a job I had for over six years that paid a little over $11 an hour. During this time on medical leave, I could not draw any income because of some "catch 22" about if my doctor released me to go back to work with limitations, and my job did not allow me to come back to work, I did not apply for short-term disability or assistance is what I was told. After my leave was exhausted and my employer said they did not have a job for my physical limitations, I was let go, and had to pay more money for COBRA. Last fall I had enrolled in BSU with student loans that barely cover school fees, books, and travel expenses as it is, from Mountain Home to Boise and the Air Base. I was doing very well for the first semester, but money was very tight then. I ended up using my savings, my tax refund, and my retirement from the company that let me go, just to pay the bills. I found out that I have a rheumatoid arthritis, osteo arthritis, spondylitis, depression, I take lots of medications and I have had back surgery, neck surgery and I am in pain most of the time. I am still waiting for my disability hearing because it takes so long to get it scheduled and I am down to maxed out credit cards and $150 dollars in the bank. My husband wants me to leave him because my medical bills are too expensive. I have two classes this second twelve weeks at the Air Base in Mountain Home that will end on June 30th. I do not know if I will continue with my BSU degree because I cannot afford to drive to Boise anymore. And if I do not get an income I may end up on the street. I cannot pay back my credit cards that I used to pay for living expenses and medical bills and prescriptions. They are maxed out. I am going to have to sell my things to get by.

To the Congressmen and Senators of this great country: Why are we so hesitant to get on the ball and do something about this crisis that filters down to more than gas? We cannot afford to live on what we have got and now we have to pay more?

While I am frustrated with my present circumstances, I know God will take care of me. What I am really worried about is this country and our leaders taking us down the path of destruction. Our country needs leaders who will demonstrate true authority, not bickering about what party did what or who is better for our country. We need to put parties aside, put aside differences, fall on our knees and ask God Almighty to forgive this county its many sins and his forgiveness and guidance.

[Please do your best to] to solve this crisis. I think we should drill for oil, build refineries, make alternatives available to the poor working public, use cooking oil instead of gasoline, use sugar cane like they do in South America, use wind power in windy places like Mountain Home, use geothermal resources, solar power, anything that is greener and healthier. [But please do it now and do not leave the rest of us for fend for ourselves in this terrible economy!] We are tired of the blame game. Someone do something and stop filibustering and stalling progress. [Such efforts stop our country from solving the problems we face.]

I know I went off on this a little long, but again, I am totally frustrated with inactivity and red tape. Thank you for all you do, but please remember the people who you work for whether they voted you in or not.

CRYSTAL, Mountain Home.

Something needs to be done. Prices keep going up everywhere. Not only is it affecting how much I spend in gas, but my grocery bill is outrageous now; Also, Idaho Power has just raised their rates. I have three children, which includes a baby in diapers. It is getting to the point where we can barely afford anything. It is really scary for us. We never have had much money, and one of the things I use to do with the kids was to go on "drives" just to get out of the house. We would go to Chevron and get drinks, then drive to different areas in Boise that we had not seen before and listen to music. Now, we cannot even do that. Prices will keep going up because they can, and people like us are going to really "pay" for it in the long run. It makes me sick. It is not like we are not trying to make it in life. I am a student at Boise State and I will be a Respiratory Therapist. We are not people looking for hand-outs. We are a family not only trying to get by, but we want to live, too. We want to enjoy life also. It upsets me when even the little things that we were able to do are now a luxury. Something has got to be done. The reality is that there is really people who cannot afford the rise in prices (for gas and everything else). There has got to be some sort of stopping point. The saying, "The rich will get richer and the poor will get poorer" sounds more like the truth to me every day. Hopefully, you can represent the families and the people who are being affected by this.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

CENTRAL MISSOURI EAGLES YOUTH HOCKEY ASSOCIATION

• Mr. BOND. Mr. President, today I recognize the Central Missouri Eagles Youth Hockey Association for their outstanding public service to the community. Also, the Eagles have been presented with the "Honoring the Game Award," presented annually by the Positive Coaching Alliance at Stanford University in 2006.

The "Honoring the Game Award" recognizes three youth sports programs that "strive to win, but also strive to help their players develop skills that will serve them throughout their lifetimes." The Eagles were the only Midwestern sports program and the only youth hockey program in the Nation to be honored.

The Eagles received the "Honoring the Game Award" in recognition for their service to the community. Each year Eagles teams commit to a local service project. These projects make a meaningful difference in mid-Missouri, and they teach the Eagles players valuable citizenship lessons about volunteering.

The Hockey's program's credo "Building Good Athletes and Great Citizens" rings true and is the foundation for this program's athletes who not only show good sportsmanship but are active every year in community service. The best way for our young people to ensure a stronger America is to be active in their communities.

The Central Missouri Eagles Youth Hockey Associations' achievements represent a great deal of dedication. I trust that they will continue the high standards of principle and perseverance that brought them this honor. I hope the Eagles continue to comprise success both on and off the rink. Again, I extend my congratulations to this exceptional association and the young people within it.●

REMEMBERING GREG HERNANDEZ

• Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring the memory of a dedicated public servant, SGT Greg Hernandez of the Tulare County Sheriff's Department. Sergeant Hernandez's life was tragically cut short on February 6, 2009, as a result of injuries from a vehicle accident that occurred while he was on duty.

Sergeant Hernandez dutifully served the citizens and communities for 24 years as a valued member of the Tulare County Sheriff's Department. Sergeant Hernandez demonstrated a passion for law enforcement and commitment to helping others, qualities that earned him the respect of his colleagues at the Tulare County Sheriff's Department. Sergeant Hernandez shall always be remembered for his devotion to serving the public and his friendly nature.

Sergeant Hernandez is survived by his mother Rosa Hernandez of Farmersville and his daughter Kristina Marie Hernandez of Porterville. When he was not spending time with his family and friends, Sergeant Hernandez was a devoted sportsman who enjoyed fishing, softball, and golf.

Sergeant Hernandez served the county of Tulare with honor and distinction, and fulfilled his oath as an officer of the law. His selfless contributions and dedication to law enforcement are greatly appreciated and will serve as an example of his legacy.

We shall always be grateful for Sergeant Hernandez's service and the sacrifices he made while serving and protecting the people of Tulare County.●

TRIBUTE TO SUSAN AXELROD

• Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I wish to acknowledge and honor the work of Citizens United for Research in Epilepsy, CURE, and its founder, Susan Axelrod. I have known Susan personally for many years and can attest to her tireless work on behalf of her daughter, Lauren, and of other children and families affected by epilepsy. Epilepsy often begins in childhood and even in its mildest forms can modify brain development, with lifelong effects on cognition ranging from learning disabilities to severe developmental disabilities. In 1998, a small group of families whose children were suffering from epilepsy joined in recognizing the need for an increased commitment to research. Together, they formed the nonprofit, volunteer-based CURE. Led by Susan, they have become tireless advocates for epilepsy awareness and have grown into one of the foremost organizations in funding cutting-edge epilepsy research. To date, CURE has raised over $9 million in its crusade toward eliminating seizures, reducing the side effects of currently available treatments, and ultimately toward finding a cure for epilepsy. I commend CURE for its unrelenting commitment to this worthy cause but underscore the fact that they cannot work alone. Epilepsy affects over 3 million patients nationwide, and the need for adequate funding for research on a Federal level is imperative if a cure is to be found. At a time when the Nation is confronted with serious health challenges like epilepsy, we must not diminish our commitment to medical research.

Please join me in honoring Susan Axelrod and CURE for their years of vision, leadership, and commitment.

I would ask to have the following Parade Magazine article highlighting the work of Citizens United for Research in Epilepsy printed in the RECORD. The material follows:

[From Parade Magazine, Feb. 15, 2009]

I MUST SAVE MY CHILD (By Melissa Fay Greene)

When Susan Axelrod tells the story of her daughter, she begins like most parents of children with epilepsy: The baby was adorable, healthy, perfect. Lauren arrived in June 1981, a treasured first-born. Susan Landau had married David Axelrod in 1979, and they lived in Chicago, where Susan pursued an MBA at the University of Chicago and David worked as a political reporter for the Chicago Tribune. (He later would become chief strategist for Barack Obama's Presidential campaign and now is a senior White House adviser.) They were busy and happy. Susan attended classes while her mother babysat. Then, when Lauren was 7 months old, their lives changed overnight.

"She had a cold," Susan tells me as we huddle in the warmth of a coffee shop in Washington, D.C., on a day of sleet and rain. Susan is 55, fine-boned, lovely, and fit. She has light-blue eyes, a runner's tan, and a casual fall of silver and ash-blond hair. When her voice trembles or tears threaten, she lifts her chin and pushes on. "The baby was so congested, it was impossible for her to sleep. Our pediatrician said to give her one-quarter of an adult dose of a cold medication, and it knocked her out immediately. I didn't hear from Lauren the rest of the night. In the morning, I found her gray and limp in her crib. I thought she was dead."

"In shock, I picked her up, and she went into a seizure—arms extended, eyes rolling back in her head. I realized she'd most likely been having seizures all night long. I phoned my mother and cried, 'This is normal, right? Babies do this?' She said, 'No, they don't.'"

The Axelrods raced Lauren to the hospital. They stayed for a month, entering a parallel universe of sleeplessness and despair under fluorescent lights. No medicine relieved the baby. She interacted with her parents one moment, bright-eyed and friendly, only to be grabbed away from them the next, shaken by inner storms, starting and stiffening, hands clenched and eyes rolling. Unable to stop Lauren's seizures, doctors sent the family home.

The Axelrods didn't know anything about epilepsy. They didn't know that seizures were the body's manifestation of abnormal electrical activity in the brain or that the excessive neuronal activity could cause brain damage. They didn't know that two-thirds of those diagnosed with epilepsy had seizures defined as "idiopathic," of unexplained origin, as would be the case with Lauren. They didn't know that a person could, on rare occasions, die from a seizure. They didn't know that, for about half of sufferers, no drugs could halt the seizures or that, if they did, the side effects were often brutal. This mysterious disorder attacked 50 million people worldwide yet attracted little public attention or research funding. No one spoke to the Axelrods of the remotest chance of a cure.

At home, life shakily returned to a new normal, interrupted by Lauren's convulsions and hospitalizations. Exhausted, Susan fought on toward her MBA; David became a political consultant. Money was tight and medical bills stacked up, but the Axelrods had hope. Wouldn't the doctors find the right drugs or procedures? "We thought maybe it was a passing thing," David says. "We didn't realize that this would define her whole life, that she would have thousands of these afterward, that they would eat away at her brain."

"I had a class one night, I was late, there was an important test," Susan recalls. "I'd been sitting by Lauren at the hospital. When she fell asleep, I left to run to class. I got as far as the double doors into the parking lot when it hit me: 'What are you doing?'" She returned to her baby's bedside. From then on, though she would continue to build her family (the Axelrods also have two sons) and support her husband's career, Susan's chief role in life would be to keep Lauren alive and functioning.

The little girl was at risk of falling, of drowning in the bathtub, of dying of a seizure. Despite dozens of drug trials, special diets, and experimental therapies, Lauren suffered as many as 25 seizures a day. In between each, she would cry, "Mommy, make it stop!"

While some of Lauren's cognitive skills were nearly on target, she lagged in abstract thinking and interpersonal skills. Her childhood was nearly friendless. The drugs Lauren took made her by turns hyperactive, listless, irritable, dazed, even physically aggressive. "We hardly knew who she was," Susan says. When she acted out in public, the family felt the judgment of onlookers. "Sometimes," Susan says, "I wished I could put a sign on her back that said: 'Epilepsy. Heavily Medicated.'"

At 17, Lauren underwent what her mother describes as "a horrific surgical procedure." Holes were drilled in her skull, electrodes implanted, and seizures provoked in an attempt to isolate their location in the brain. It was a failure. "We brought home a 17-year-old girl who had been shaved and scalped, drilled, put on steroids, and given two black eyes," Susan says quietly. "We put her through hell without result. I wept for 24 hours."

The failure of surgery proved another turning point for Susan. "Finally, I thought, 'Well, I can cry forever, or I can try to make a change.'"

Susan began to meet other parents living through similar hells. They agreed that no federal agency or private foundation was acting with the sense of urgency they felt, leaving 3 million American families to suffer in near-silence. In 1998, Susan and a few other mothers founded a nonprofit organization to increase public awareness of the realities of epilepsy and to raise money for research. They named it after the one thing no one offered them: CURE—Citizens United for Research in Epilepsy.

"Epilepsy is not benign and far too often is not treatable," Susan says. "We wanted the public to be aware of the death and destruction. We wanted the brightest minds to engage with the search for a cure."

Then-First Lady Hillary Clinton signed on to help; so did other politicians and celebrities. Later, veterans back from Iraq with seizures caused by traumatic brain injuries demanded answers, too. In its first decade, CURE raised $9 million, funded about 75 research projects, and inspired a change in the scientific dialogue about epilepsy.

"CURE evolved from a small group of concerned parents into a major force in our research and clinical communities," says Dr. Frances E. Jensen, a professor of neurology at Harvard Medical School. "It becomes more and more evident that it won't be just the doctors, researchers, and scientists pushing the field forward. There's an active role for parents and patients. They tell us when the drugs aren't working."

The future holds promise for unlocking the mysteries of what some experts now call Epilepsy Spectrum Disorder. "Basic neuroscience, electrophysiological studies, gene studies, and new brain-imaging technologies are generating a huge body of knowledge," Dr. Jensen says.

Lauren Axelrod, now 27, is cute and petite, with short black hair and her mother's pale eyes. She speaks slowly, with evident impairment but a strong Chicago accent. "Things would be better for me if I wouldn't have seizures," she says. "They make me have problems with reading and math. They make me hard with everything."

By 2000, the savagery and relentlessness of Lauren's seizures seemed unstoppable. "I thought we were about to lose her," Susan says. "Her doctor said, 'I don't know what else we can do.'" Then, through CURE, Susan learned of a new anti-convulsant drug called Keppra and obtained a sample. "The first day we started Lauren on the medication," Susan says, "her seizures subsided. It's been almost nine years, and she hasn't had a seizure since. This drug won't work for everyone, but it has been a magic bullet for Lauren. She is blooming."

Susan and David see their daughter regaining some lost ground: social intuition, emotional responses, humor. "It's like little areas of her brain are waking up," Susan says. "She never has a harsh word for anyone, though she did think the Presidential campaign went on a little too long. The Thanksgiving before last, she asked David, 'When is this running-for-President thing going to be finished?'"

CURE is run by parents. Susan has worked for more than a decade without pay, pushing back at the monster robbing Lauren of a normal life. "Nothing can match the anguish of the mom of a chronically ill child," David says, "but Susan turned that anguish into action. She's devoted her life to saving other kids and families from the pain Lauren and our family have known. What she's done is amazing."

"Complete freedom from seizures—without side effects—is what we want," Susan says. "It's too late for us, so we committed ourselves to the hope that we can protect future generations from having their lives defined and devastated by this disorder." ●

HONORING GROVER GUNDRILLING INC.

● Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, this week marks the Consortium of Entrepreneurship Education's 3rd Annual National Entrepreneurship Week, a time to celebrate the history of American entrepreneurship and to highlight new and upcoming entrepreneurs and small business owners. As ranking member of the Senate Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship, I am all the more aware of the countless contributions entrepreneurs have made to the success of this Nation. In that vein, I rise today to recognize Grover Gundrilling Inc., a small business in my home State of Maine that brings a very unique and critical skill to the Northeast.

A second generation family-owned small business, Grover Gundrilling, or GGI, specializes in precision deephole drilling. With nearly 60 skilled employees, GGI has developed the capability to drill smooth, finished holes ranging from .045 of an inch to 2 inches in diameter, from 1 ounce to 6,000 pounds, at a depth of 1 inch to 10 feet in every material from Teflon to mold steels to exotic high-temperature alloys. Founded in 1983 by Rupert and Suzanne Grover, Grover Gundrilling now has three facilities in Oxford County, including a 40,000-square-foot manufacturing facility in the town of Norway. And as former teachers, the Grovers like to hire employees with no background as machinists, but with strong math and science skills, to train them in their own particular fashion.

Given its remarkable growth, considerable capacity, and small company size, GGI prides itself on being "small enough to listen and large enough to handle production." Grover Gundrilling has become a critical supplier for industries as diverse as aerospace engineering and nuclear power, and its components are used in products as varied as medical devices and semiconductors.

To care for its staff, Grover Gundrilling generously provides its employees with full family medical coverage, flexible scheduling, and the company encourages its workers to pursue higher learning by offering educational reimbursement. And the company offers a multitude of incentives to stellar employees, including family snowmobiling trips and tickets to a variety of area events.

GGI is also dedicated to supporting its community in a variety of ways. The Grovers donate significant time and energy to the Oxford County Fair, a fun-filled annual tradition for the families of Oxford County and western Maine. They also created the Boxberry School, a nonprofit independent elementary school for K through sixth graders that combines multiage classes, individual attention, and an integrated art curriculum with the Maine

Learning Results standards. The Grovers also volunteer in various capacities with the 4-H Club, Androscoggin Home Health, the Oxford Food Pantry, and Aspire Higher, and Suzanne Grover serves on the board of directors of the Growth Council.

Carving out a niche in the machine tool world, Grover Gundrilling has excelled as a leader in precision deephole drilling. It is entrepreneurs like Suzanne and Rupert Grover who are going to revitalize our economy, and I am proud to call them constituents. I wish Rupert and Suzanne Grover, as well as Garth, their son, and GGI's president, their daughter Jessica, and everyone at Grover Gundrilling Inc. a successful year.●

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mrs. Neiman, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. VOINOVICH (for himself and Mr. KOHL):

S. 469. A bill to amend chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code, to modify the computation for part-time service under the Civil Service Retirement System; to the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs.

Mr. VOINOVICH. Mr. President, I am pleased to be joined by Senator KOHL in introducing legislation to assist many of our Nation's public servants who choose to work part-time for a portion of their Federal career. The legislation is timely given the increasing number of Federal employees eligible to retire and the need for agencies to retain an experienced workforce to carry out critical government functions.

Our legislation would change the computation of Civil Service Retirement System, CSRS, annuities involving part-time service by correcting an anomaly that is a disincentive for employees nearing the end of their careers who would like to phase into retirement by working part-time. Under current law, if an employee under the CSRS system with substantial full-time service before 1986 switches to a part-time schedule at the end of his or her career, the high-three average salary that is applied to service before 1986 is the pro-rated salary or, if higher, the full-time salary from the years before the employee began working part-time. This often results in a disproportionate reduction in the employee's benefit.

The legislation would clarify that CSRS annuities based in whole or in part on part-time service should be pro-rated for the period of service that was performed on a part-time basis. The correction will help agencies, as part of their succession planning efforts, in retaining the expertise of staff that elect to work on a part-time basis at the end of their Federal careers. It is my hope agencies will include this tool in their human capital plans to help facilitate the transfer of knowledge to the next generation of government leaders.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

By Mr. DURBIN (for himself and Ms. KLOBUCHAR):

S. 470. A bill to combat organized crime involving the illegal acquisition of retail goods for the purpose of selling those illegally obtained goods through physical and online retail marketplaces; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I rise to speak about legislation that I am introducing today, the Combating Organized Retail Crime Act of 2009. This legislation takes important steps to confront the growing problem of organized criminal activity involving stolen and resold retail goods. This organized retail crime costs retailers billions of dollars per year and creates significant health and safety risks for consumers. My legislation will toughen criminal laws and put in place effective regulatory and information-sharing measures to help retailers, secondary marketplaces, and law enforcement agencies work together to stop this crime. I am pleased that my colleague Senator KLOBUCHAR is joining me in introducing this important legislation, and I look forward to working with her and all my colleagues to see it passed into law.

I recently became Chairman of the Senate Crime and Drugs Subcommittee and I hope to hold a hearing in the Subcommittee on the problem of organized retail crime and the Combating Organized Retail Crime Act. I also want to acknowledge that Congressman BOBBY SCOTT, the Chairman of the House Crime Subcommittee, and Congressman BRAD ELLSWORTH are each introducing bills to crack down on organized retail crime. I look forward to working with them and all of my colleagues to enact legislation that will address this growing problem in a comprehensive and effective manner.

Organized retail crime rings currently operate across the Nation and internationally. Their criminal activity begins with the coordinated theft of large amounts of items from retail stores with the intent to resell those items. The foot soldiers in these organized retail crime rings are professional shoplifters, called “boosters,” who steal from retail stores such items as over-the-counter drugs, baby formula, medical diagnostic tests, health and beauty aids, clothing, razor blades, and electronic devices. These boosters often use sophisticated means for evading retailer anti-theft safeguards, and occasionally dishonest retail employees are complicit in the theft. Each booster routinely steals thousands of dollars worth of items from multiple stores, and delivers the items to a “fence,” or a person who buys stolen products from boosters for a fee that is frequently paid in cash or drugs.

Today, organized retail crime rings often enlist numerous fences to deliver stolen retail goods to processing and storage warehouses operated by the rings. At these warehouse locations, teams of workers sort the stolen items, disable anti-theft tracking devices, and remove labels that identify the items with a particular retailer. In some instances, they alter items' expiration dates, replace labels with those of more expensive products, or dilute products and repackage the modified contents in seemingly-authentic packaging. Often, the conditions in which these stolen goods are transported, handled and stored are substandard, leading to the deterioration or contamination of the goods.

Organized retail crime rings typically resell their stolen merchandise in physical marketplaces, such as flea markets and swap-meets, or on Internet auction sites. Internet sites are particularly tempting avenues for these sales, since the Internet reaches a worldwide market and allows sellers to operate anonymously and maximize return.

Organized retail crime has a variety of harmful effects. Retailers and the FBI estimate that this crime costs retailers approximately $30 billion per year and deprives states of hundreds of millions of dollars in lost sales tax revenues. The proceeds of organized retail crime can be used to finance other forms of criminal behavior, including gang activity, drug trafficking and international terrorism. Further, organized retail crime often involves the resale of consumable goods like baby formula or medical diagnostic tests like diabetic strips, which can cause significant harm to consumers when stored improperly or sold past their expiration date.

Although the problem of organized retail crime predates the economic crisis facing our nation, the current recession has lent more urgency to the need to curb organized retail crime. In recent months theft and shoplifting from retailers has increased and retailers' revenues have decreased, thus enlarging the bite that organized retail crime has taken out of retailers' balance sheets. A December 2008 survey by the Retail Industry Leaders Association found that 80 percent of the retailers surveyed reported experiencing an increase in organized retail crime since the start of the current economic downturn. In a 2008 survey of loss prevention executives performed by the National Retail Federation, 85 percent of the 114 retailers surveyed indicated that their company had been a victim of organized retail crime in the past 12 months. Many law enforcement officials predict that organized retail crime will continue to increase during these troubled economic times.

After I introduced legislation on this subject last Congress, I listened to the views of stakeholders from law enforcement, the retail community, and the Internet marketplace community, and have made several revisions to my legislation in response to their suggestions. The legislation I am introducing today, the Combating Organized Retail Crime Act of 2009, would do the following:

First, it would toughen the criminal code's treatment of organized retail crime. It would refine certain offenses, such as the crimes of interstate transport and sale of stolen goods, to capture conduct that is being committed by individuals engaged in organized retail crime. It would also require the U.S. Sentencing Commission to consider relevant sentencing guideline enhancements.

Second, the bill would establish a reporting system through which evidence of organized retail crime can be effectively shared between the victimized retailers, the marketplaces where items are being resold, and the Justice Department. The bill would create a form that retailers could use to describe suspected illegal sales activity involving goods that were stolen from that retailer. The retailer would sign and submit this form to both the Justice Department and to the operator of a physical or online marketplace where the stolen goods are suspected of being offered for resale. Upon receiving the form, the marketplace operator would be required to conduct an account review of the suspected sellers and provide the results of that account review to the Justice Department. This reporting system would ensure that the Justice Department receives information from both retailers and marketplaces in order to piece together organized retail crime investigations and prosecutions.

Third, the bill would require that when a marketplace operator is presented with clear and convincing evidence that a seller on that marketplace is selling stolen goods, the operator must terminate that seller's activities unless the seller can produce exculpatory evidence. The bill would also require that when a marketplace operator is presented with evidence of criminal activity involving a seller who offers consumable goods or medical diagnostic tests on that marketplace, the operator must immediately suspend the ability of that seller to sell such goods because of the potentially imminent danger to public safety.

Additionally, the bill would require high-volume sellers on Internet marketplace sites to provide a physical address to the marketplace operator. This address would be shared with the Justice Department and with retailers who attest and provide evidence that the high-volume seller is suspected of reselling goods stolen from that retailer. This address-sharing regime will permit appropriate inquiries to determine whether high-volume Internet sellers are legitimate operations, and is similar to address-sharing regimes that permit inquiries into possible copyright violations by online sellers.

In sum, the Combating Organized Retail Crime Act of 2009 is targeted legislation that aims to deter organized retail crime and facilitate the identification and prosecution of those who participate in it. The bill heightens the penalties for organized retail crime, shuts down criminals who are selling stolen goods, and places valuable information about illegal activity into the hands of law enforcement. This legislation has broad support in the retail industry in my home state of Illinois and nationwide. It is supported by the Illinois Retail Merchants Association, the National Retail Federation, the Retail Industry Leaders Association, the Food Marketing Institute, the National Association of Chain Drug Stores, and the Coalition to Stop Organized Retail Crime, whose members include such retail chains as Walgreens, Home Depot, Target, Wal-Mart, Safeway, and Macy's.

Organized retail crime is a growing problem nationwide. There is a pressing need to address it, particularly in light of the weakening economy and the risks such crime creates for unknowing consumers. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation so we can effectively combat this crime.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 470

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Combating Organized Retail Crime Act of 2009”.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) Organized retail crime involves the coordinated acquisition of large volumes of retail merchandise by theft, embezzlement, fraud, false pretenses, or other illegal means from commercial entities engaged in interstate commerce, for the purpose of selling or distributing such illegally obtained items in the stream of commerce. Organized retail crime is a growing problem nationwide that costs American companies and consumers billions of dollars annually and that has a substantial and direct effect upon interstate commerce.

(2) The illegal acquisition and black-market sale of merchandise by persons engaged in organized retail crime result in an estimated annual loss of hundreds of millions of dollars in sales and income tax revenues to State and local governments.

(3) The illegal acquisition, unsafe tampering and storage, and unregulated redistribution of consumer products such as baby formula, over-the-counter drugs, medical diagnostic tests, and other items by persons engaged in organized retail crime pose a health and safety hazard to consumers nationwide.

(4) Investigations into organized retail crime have revealed that the illegal income resulting from such crime often benefits persons and organizations engaged in other forms of criminal activity, such as drug trafficking and gang activity.

(5) Items obtained through organized retail crime are resold in a variety of different marketplaces, including flea markets, swap meets, open-air markets, and Internet auction websites. Increasingly, persons engaged in organized retail crime use Internet auction websites to resell illegally obtained items. The Internet offers such sellers a worldwide market and a degree of anonymity that physical marketplace settings do not offer.

No provision of this Act, including any amendment made by this Act, shall be construed as indicating an intent on the part of Congress to occupy the field in which that provision or amendment operates, including criminal penalties, to the exclusion of any State law on the same subject matter that would otherwise be within the authority of the State, unless there is a positive conflict between that provision or amendment and that State law so that the 2 cannot consistently stand together.

SEC. 6. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act take effect 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

By Ms. SNOWE (for herself, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. KENNEDY, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. DURBIN, and Mr. BINGAMAN):

S. 471. A bill to amend the Education Sciences Reform Act of 2002 to require the Statistics Commissioner to collect information from coeducational secondary schools on such schools' athletic programs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise to introduce the High School Sports Information Collection Act. I am pleased to be joined again this year by my colleague from Washington, Senator MURRAY. Since the 108th Congress, we have introduced this bill to require that high schools, like their collegiate counterparts, disclose data on equity in sports, making it possible for student athletes and their parents to ensure fairness in their school's athletic programs.

Since my first day in Washington in 1979, I have been a stalwart supporter of Title IX. And there should be no mistake what this 37-year-old landmark civil rights law is all about—equal opportunity for both girls and boys to excel in athletics. Obviously, athletic participation supports physical health, but sports also impart benefits beyond the playing field. For girls who engage in sports, half are less likely to suffer depression and breast cancer, 80 percent are less likely to have a drug problem, and 92 percent are less likely to have an unwanted pregnancy. Athletic competition helps cultivate the kind of positive, competitive spirit that develops dedication, self-confidence, a sense of team spirit, and ultimate success later in life. So it's not surprising that, according to several studies, more than eight out of ten successful businesswomen played organized sports while growing up!

Without question, Title IX has been the driving factor in allowing thousands of women and girls the opportunity to benefit from intercollegiate and high school sports. Indeed, prior to Title IX, only 1 in 27 high school girls—fewer than 300,000—played sports. Today, the number is more than 2.9 million, that's an increase of over 900 percent! Moreover, our country is celebrating the achievements of our women athletes now more than ever. Just a few weeks ago, tennis player Serena Williams became the all-time prize-money leader in women's sports by reaching both the doubles and singles finals in the Australian Open—not to mention that she won both titles! I am particularly pleased that Ms. Williams expressed appreciation for Title IX, proving how impactful this policy has been in giving her, and many other women, the opportunity to play sports.

So while we celebrate this remarkable progress, we cannot allow ourselves a "time-out" or rest on past success. That is why I am pleased to work with Senator PATTY MURRAY—who has been a tireless advocate for women's sports—to reintroduce the High School Sports Data Collection Act of 2007. Our bill directs the Commissioner of the National Center for Education Statistics to collect information regarding participation in athletics broken down by gender; teams; race and ethnicity; and overall expenditures, including items like travel expenses, equipment and uniforms. These data are already reported, in most cases, to the state Departments of Education and should not pose any additional burden on the high schools. Further, to ensure public access to this vital information, our legislation would require high schools to post the data on the Department of Education's website and make this information available to students and the public upon request.

For nearly 40 years, Title IX has opened doors by giving women and girls an equal opportunity to participate in student athletic programs. This bill will continue that tradition by allowing us to assess current opportunities for sports participation for young women, and correct any deficiencies. With this new information, we can ensure that young women all over the country have the chance not only to improve their athletic ability, but also to develop the qualities of teamwork, discipline, and self-confidence that lead to success off the playing field.

By Mr. DURBIN (for himself, Mr. WICKER, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. BOND, Mr. CARDIN, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mrs. LINCOLN, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. REED, Mr. ROBERTS, Mr. SANDERS, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. WHITEHOUSE, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. REID, and Ms. STABENOW):

S. 473. A bill to establish the Senator Paul Simon Study Abroad Foundation; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce the Senator Paul Simon Study Abroad Foundation Act.

This year marks the 200th anniversary of Abraham Lincoln's birth. We will spend this bicentennial year reflecting on Lincoln's legacy, a legacy that extends far beyond the Civil War. President Lincoln strove to democratize higher education. He enacted the Morrill Act, establishing public land grant universities and opening the doors to a college education to more Americans.

As we recognize Lincoln's legacy this year, we can again transform higher education. Today with Senator WICKER I am introducing the Senator Paul Simon Study Abroad Foundation Act, which has the potential to equip a new generation of Americans with the skills to live in a globalized world.

The bill is named after the late Senator Paul Simon, a man whose passion for the public good remains an inspiration to all who knew him. Shortly before his death in late 2003, Senator Simon came back to Washington to talk to his former colleagues about the need to strengthen American security. He wondered how the United States could lead the world to stability, peace, and harmony when so many Americans are ignorant of the world. He envisioned a United States populated by a generation of Americans with greater international understanding—an understanding arrived at not by just studying the world, but by living in it. He believed this study abroad initiative would be as transformative as Lincoln's work to expand access to college.

Paul's tireless efforts led to Congress' establishment of the Abraham Lincoln Study Abroad Commission. I was honored to serve on this bipartisan Lincoln Commission, and it was a privilege for me to introduce legislation in the past two Congresses to bring Paul Simon's dream closer to reality. The bill is based on the Commission's recommendations for a study abroad program for undergraduate students that will help build global awareness and international understanding. In the last Congress, this bill was supported by 50 bipartisan cosponsors.

The Senator Paul Simon Study Abroad Foundation Act has big goals. It declares our intention to send one million students abroad per year within the next decade. More of those students will study in the developing world and the students we send will be more diverse in terms of race, socioeconomic background, and field of study. To accomplish these goals, a small public-private entity, the Senator Paul Simon Foundation, will award grants to students and institutions of higher education. The goal of the program is to make study abroad in high-quality programs in diverse locations around the world more common for all college students. Grants to colleges and universities will be used to encourage tearing down institutional barriers to study abroad. By leveraging change at the institution level, the Foundation will create opportunities for countless students—far more than possible through direct student grants alone.

Expanding study abroad should be a national priority. The future of the country depends on globally literate citizens who are at ease in the world. In his troubled time, Lincoln said, "The occasion is piled high with difficulty, and we must rise with the occasion. As our case is new, so we must think anew, and act anew." Today, our Nation also faces an occasion piled high with difficulty. By passing the Senator Paul Simon Study Abroad Foundation Act, we will send the next generation of Americans out into the world with open minds and they will come back able to think anew and act anew. I ask my colleagues to join Senator WICKER and me in support of this important legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 473

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Senator Paul Simon Study Abroad Foundation Act of 2009”.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) According to former President George W. Bush, “America’s leadership and national security rest on our commitment to educate and prepare our youth for active engagement in the international community.”

(2) According to former President William J. Clinton, “Today, the defense of United States interests, the effective management of global issues, and even an understanding of our Nation’s diversity require ever-greater contact with, and understanding of, people and cultures beyond our borders.”

(3) Congress authorized the establishment of the Commission on the Abraham Lincoln Study Abroad Fellowship Program pursuant to section 104 of the Miscellaneous Appropriations and Offsets Act, 2004 (division H of Public Law 108-199). Pursuant to its mandate, the Lincoln Commission has submitted to Congress and the President a report of its recommendations for greatly expanding the opportunity for students at institutions of higher education in the United States to study abroad, with special emphasis on studying in developing nations.

(4) According to the Lincoln Commission, “[s]tudy abroad is one of the major means of producing foreign language speakers and enhancing foreign language learning” and, for that reason, “is simply essential to the [N]ation’s security”.

(5) Studies consistently show that United States students score below their counterparts in other advanced countries on indicators of international knowledge. This lack of global literacy is a national liability in an age of global trade and business, global interdependence, and global terror.

(6) Americans believe that it is important for their children to learn other languages, study abroad, attend a college where they can interact with international students, learn about other countries and cultures, and generally be prepared for the global age.

(7) In today’s world, it is more important than ever for the United States to be a responsible, constructive leader that other countries are willing to follow. Such leadership cannot be sustained without an informed citizenry with significant knowledge and awareness of the world.

(8) Study abroad has proven to be a very effective means of imparting international and foreign-language competency to students.

(9) In any given year, only approximately one percent of all students enrolled in United States institutions of higher education study abroad.

(10) Less than 10 percent of the students who graduate from United States institutions of higher education with bachelors degrees have studied abroad.

(11) Far more study abroad must take place in developing countries. Ninety-five percent of the world’s population growth over the next 50 years will occur outside of Europe. Yet in the academic year 2004-2005, 60 percent of United States students studying abroad studied in Europe, and 45 percent studied in four countries—the United Kingdom, Italy, Spain, and France—according to the Institute of International Education.

(12) The Final Report of the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States (The 9/11 Commission Report) recommended that the United States increase support for “scholarship, exchange, and library programs”. The 9/11 Public Discourse Project, successor to the 9/11 Commission, noted in its November 14, 2005, status report that this recommendation was “unfulfilled,” and stated that “[t]he U.S. should increase support for scholarship and exchange programs, our most powerful tool to shape attitudes over the course of a generation.” In its December 5, 2005, Final Report on the 9/11 Commission Recommendations, the 9/11 Public Discourse Project gave the government a grade of “D” for its implementation of this recommendation.

(13) Investing in a national study abroad program would help turn a grade of “D” into an “A” by equipping United States students to communicate United States values and way of life through the unique dialogue that takes place among citizens from around the world when individuals study abroad.

(14) An enhanced national study abroad program could help further the goals of other United States Government initiatives to promote educational, social, and political reform and the status of women in developing and reforming societies around the world, such as the Middle East Partnership Initiative.

(15) To complement such worthwhile Federal programs and initiatives as the Benjamin A. Gilman International Scholarship Program, the National Security Education Program, and the National Security Language Initiative, a broad-based undergraduate study abroad program is needed that will make many more study abroad opportunities accessible to all undergraduate students, regardless of their field of study, ethnicity, socio-economic status, or gender.

(16) To restore America’s standing in the world, President Barack Obama has said that he will call on our nation’s greatest resource, our people, to reach out to and engage with other nations.

SEC. 3. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to significantly enhance the global competitiveness and international knowledge base of the United States by ensuring that more United States students have the opportunity to acquire foreign language skills and international knowledge through significantly expanded study abroad;

(2) to enhance the foreign policy capacity of the United States by significantly expanding and diversifying the talent pool of individuals with non-traditional foreign language skills and cultural knowledge in the United States who are available for recruitment by United States foreign affairs agencies, legislative branch agencies, and non-governmental organizations involved in foreign affairs activities;

(3) to ensure that an increasing portion of study abroad by United States students will take place in nontraditional study abroad destinations such as the People’s Republic of China, countries of the Middle East region, and developing countries; and

By Mr. GRASSLEY (for himself and Mrs. McCASKILL):

S. 474. A bill to amend the Congressional Accountability Act of 1995 to apply whistleblower protections available to certain executive branch employees to legislative branch employees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I come to introduce another bill as part of my Accountability in Government Week. Yesterday I introduced the False Claims Act Clarification Act to help restore the original intent of the most successful law the Government utilizes to protect taxpayers' dollars from fraud, waste, and abuse.

One key component I added to the False Claims Act when it was amended in 1986 was allowing whistleblowers to file cases on behalf of the Government when they are aware of fraud or abuse of taxpayers' funds. Whistleblowers are the key to unlocking the secrets of wrongdoing because they have access to information about how the frauds were perpetrated and can help lead authorities in the right direction to uncover the fraud. However, for their brave efforts whistleblowers are often the victims of retaliation and are removed from their jobs by supervisors who do not want the wrongdoing uncovered.

I have often said whistleblowers were as welcome as skunks at a picnic, despite the fact that all they do is bring forward the truth. This is wrong. That is why I have supported strong whistleblower protection laws during my time in the Congress.

The landmark whistleblower law is the Whistleblower Protection Act of 1989—I believe is the year it was passed—providing rights and remedies to executive branch whistleblowers who are the victims of retaliation. I proudly cosponsored that bill. But like many laws that are 20 years old, it needs to be updated. So I have cosponsored legislation introduced by Democratic Senator AKAKA to do just that. However, that law also needs to be extended to employees of the legislative and judicial branches of Government. So I come today to start the discussion and to introduce legislation that will provide the same whistleblower protection rights currently extended to executive branch employees to the legislative branch.

I am pleased to be joined by Senator McCASKILL in introducing the Congressional Whistleblower Protection Act of 2009. This important legislation simply adds whistleblower protections to the legislative branch by incorporating the Whistleblower Protection Act into the Congressional Accountability Act of 1995, a law that I authored to bring Congress in line with many labor and workplace practices that affected businesses around the country because I have long believed Congress should practice what it preaches. This legislation will do just that.

You might remember the Congressional Accountability Act was passed because, going back to the 1930s, Congress had exempted itself from a lot of employment laws because we individual Senators are employers, the Congress is an employer, but we exempted ourselves from, I think, 18, 19 different laws at that particular time.

So in 1995 I wanted to end the proposition of why we had two sets of laws in this country—one for Capitol Hill and one for the rest of the country. Now, since 1995, we have one set of laws, but we do not have the whistleblower protections that ought to be in it.

A theme that has dominated this new Congress, as well as dominated the campaign of last fall, is accountability and responsibility in Washington. In most instances, the only reason we discovered waste or fraud is because employees were brave enough to stand up to the wrongdoers and to expose the offenses. Without these whistleblowers, the American taxpayer would continue to foot a bill that might be a violation of law, might be fraudulent use of taxpayers' money, might just be a waste of taxpayer money. Either way, taxpayers are hurt.

This bill is long overdue. I have previously introduced similar legislation, but, unfortunately, those bills were never brought out of committee. I hope the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee, of which the chairman is on the Senate floor—I did not know the Senator would be so available for me to preach to him. I hope the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee will examine this legislation and will closely and expeditiously report it to the full Senate so we can ensure employees of the legislative branch that they are protected from any reprisals relating to protected whistleblowing the same way as executive branch employees.

Now, it has been a number of years since the Congressional Accountability Act was signed into law. So I would like to remind my colleagues why we passed that law. It was a time very similar to today. The American people were demanding more from their elected officials in Washington and wanted accountability and transparency in all branches of Government. I believed then, as I do now, that Congress needs to put its money where its mouth is and apply the various labor and employment laws that were enforced on other branches of Government and businesses all across the country.

That is what the Congressional Accountability Act did. It applied a number of important laws to Congress, including the Fair Labor Standards Act, title VII, the Civil Rights Act, the Americans With Disabilities Act, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, Family Medical Leave Act, the Occupational Safety and Health Act, Employee Polygraph Protection Act, Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification Act, the Rehabilitation Act, as well as some provisions of title V relating to Federal service labor-management relations. It also created the Office of Compliance of the legislative branch that oversees the application of these important laws to this branch of Government and ensures that employees' rights under these laws are protected.

While the Congressional Accountability Act was a good start, the Office of Compliance has recommended additional laws be applied to the legislative branch, including the purpose of my bill, the Whistleblower Protection Act.

We have already taken the steps to protect whistleblowers in the executive branch, so it does not make sense not to extend those same protections to whistleblowers working right here in our own backyard on Capitol Hill. My bill will, very simply, give congressional employees the same protections that workers of other branches of Government have. It does this by simply adding the Whistleblower Protection Act to the preexisting list of statutes that are applied to the legislative branch by the Congressional Accountability Act.

This is a straightforward and simple solution to ensuring that employees of the legislative branch are not without vital whistleblower protections. So I ask, in closing, that my colleagues join me and Senator McCASKILL in supporting this bill to ensure that those who help us in the fight to hold Government accountable are not punished for those efforts.

By Ms. SNOWE (for herself and Mr. WHITEHOUSE):

S. 481. A bill to authorize additional Federal Bureau of Investigation field agents to investigate financial crimes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a bill with Senator WHITEHOUSE to extend the reach of the Federal Bureau of Investigation into financial crimes that may have helped precipitate last year's economic meltdown.

We must investigate and scrutinize this financial crisis as we would a terrorist attack in order to determine its causes and how to preempt another economic collapse in the United States.

Following the September 11 attacks, the FBI redirected approximately 1,000 agents to counterterrorism and counterintelligence activities. Without a doubt, there is no argument that our country has benefitted from the dedicated efforts of the men and women of the FBI who are performing this valuable work.

Over a 10-year period, from fiscal year 1999 to fiscal year 2008, Congress has increased direct appropriations for the FBI from $2.993 billion and 26,693 positions to $6.658 billion—122 percent increase—and 30,211 positions—13 percent increase. Most of these new resources were provided in the wake of the September 11 terrorist attacks, as the FBI redirected its resources toward combating domestic and international terrorism by improving its intelligence gathering and processing capabilities. As a consequence, for fiscal year 2008, about 60 percent of FBI funding and staffing is allocated to national security programs, including counterterrorism and counterintelligence.

In view of the breadth and severity of the economic crisis brought on by events in U.S. financial markets, however, I am very concerned that criminal wrongdoing may have played a significant role in crippling some of America's largest companies. Criminal activity, such as fraud, misrepresentation, self-dealing, and insider trading may have instigated or exacerbated the financial industry upheaval of 2008–2009.

In order to augment FBI investigations of financial crimes, the FBI Priorities Act of 2009 authorizes $150 million for each of the fiscal years 2010 through 2014 to fund approximately 1,000 Federal Bureau of Investigation field agents in addition to the number of field agents serving on the date of enactment. It is my hope that this extra manpower will enable the FBI to develop leads on unlawful actions, dig deeply into those leads, and bring responsible parties to justice. The American public deserves no less.

By Mr. FEINGOLD (for himself, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. BENNETT, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. ALEXANDER, Mr. REID, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. ISAKSON, Mr. DODD, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. NELSON of Nebraska, Mr. REED, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. BROWN, and Mr. CARDIN):

S. 482. A bill to require Senate candidates to file designations, statements, and reports in electronic form; read the first time.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, today I will once again introduce with the senior Senator from Mississippi, Mr. COCHRAN, the Senate Campaign Disclosure Parity Act, a bill to require that Senate candidates file their campaign finance disclosure reports electronically and that those reports be promptly made available to the public. This step is long overdue; indeed I first introduced this bill in 2003. I hope that the Senate will act quickly on this legislation this year.

A series of reports by the Campaign Finance Institute has highlighted the anomaly in the election laws that makes it nearly impossible for the public to get access to Senate campaign finance reports while most other reports are available on the Internet within 24 hours of their filing with the Federal Election Commission, FEC. The Campaign Finance Institute asks a rhetorical question: "What makes the Senate so special that it exempts itself from a key requirement of campaign finance disclosure that applies to everyone else, including candidates for the House of Representatives and Political Action Committees?"

The answer, of course, is nothing. The U.S. Senate is special in many ways. I am proud to serve here. But there is no excuse for keeping our campaign finance information inaccessible to the public when the information filed by House candidates or others is readily available.

My bill amends the section of the election laws dealing with electronic filing to require reports filed with the Secretary of the Senate to be filed electronically and forwarded to the FEC within 24 hours. The FEC is required to make available on the Internet within 24 hours any filing it receives electronically. So if this bill is enacted, electronic versions of Senate reports should be available to the public within 48 hours of their filing. That will be a vast improvement over the current situation, which, according to the Campaign Finance Institute, requires journalists and interested members of the public to review computer images of paper-filed copies of reports, and involves a completely wasteful expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars to re-enter information into databases that almost every campaign has available in electronic format.

The current filing system also means that the detailed coding that the FEC does, which allows for more sophisticated searches and analysis, is completed over a week later for Senate reports than for House reports. This means that the final disclosure reports covering the first two weeks of October are often not susceptible to detailed scrutiny before the election. According to the Campaign Finance Institute, in the 2006 election, "[v]oters in six of the hottest Senate races were out of luck the week before the November 7 election if they did Web searches for information on general election contributions since June 30. . . . In all ten of the most closely followed Senate races voters were unable to search through any candidate reports for information on pre-general election (October 1–18) donations." And a September 18, 2006, column by Jeffery H. Birnbaum in the Washington Post noted that "When the polls opened in November 2004, voters were in the dark about $53 million in individual Senate contributions of $200 or more dating all the way back to July. . . ."

Because the Senate failed to pass this bill last Congress, even though we had 48 bipartisan cosponsors and no known opposition, and even though the Senate Rules Committee reported the bill by voice vote, the same problem existed for Senate elections in the 2008 cycle. In addition, because of the expense, when the FEC puts information from the paper filings in its electronic database, it only enters contributions, not expenditures. So anyone interested in how a Senate campaign is spending its money has to consult the paper forms.

As Roll Call said in its recent editorial in favor of the bill, "[i]t's time for this nonsense to come to an end." It is time for the Senate to at long last relinquish its backward attitude toward campaign finance disclosure. I urge the enactment of this simple bill that will make our reports subject to the same prompt, public scrutiny as those filed by PACs, House and Presidential candidates, and even 527 organizations. I close with another question from the Campaign Finance Institute: "Isn't it time that the Senate join the 21st century and allow itself to vote on a simple legislative fix that could significantly improve our democracy?" This Congress, let us finally answer that question in the affirmative.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered as follows:

OUTRAGEOUS

In this year when "transparency" is all the rage, it would be appropriate for the Senate—at long last—to join the House and every federal political committee in filing campaign finance reports electronically.

Fundraising and spending reports for the end of 2008 were due on Jan. 31. Reports for House Members and candidates and the Republican and Democratic parties and their campaign committees all were instantly available to the media, watchdog groups and the public on the Federal Election Commission's Web site.

But Senate reports take weeks from the filing deadline to make it into the public realm. And when they are made available, it's at the conclusion of a circuitous process that costs taxpayers an estimated $250,000 a year that could be far better spent elsewhere—almost anywhere else—or simply used to narrow the federal deficit.

Moreover, because of the expense, the FEC does not electronically post Senate campaign expenditures, only contributions—a gap that Steve Weissman of the Campaign Finance Institute correctly calls "outrageous."

Senators use FEC-approved software to compile their reports, but then they snail-mail paper copies to the office of the Secretary of the Senate, which then scans some 27,000 pages and sends them electronically to the FEC.

They can be then combed through page by page on the FEC Web site, but not digitally manipulated or matched. The FEC hires a contractor to key the data into digital form. Only then, a month or more after the filing deadline, can the data be searched and connections made, if any, between money collected and votes or positions Senators or their opponents have taken.

But it still takes page-by-page searching to review candidates' spending—to determine, for instance, if candidates' relatives are on the campaign payroll.

All this ridiculous complexity is necessary because in 2000 the Senate exempted itself from an electronic filing requirement written into the FEC's appropriation. Legislation to correct the situation has been regularly introduced by Sen. Russ Feingold (D-Wis.), and it's regularly had dozens of cosponsors.

But it's never passed. Change was resisted at first by Sen. Robert Byrd (D-W.Va.), who wanted to maintain a fusty Senate "prerogative," and then by various Republican Senators who wanted to attach amendments that amounted to "poison pills."

Last year, the Senate Rules and Administration Committee approved the bill for floor action, but it was blocked by Sen. John Ensign (R-Nev.) who sought to add a provision requiring disclosure of the donors to any organization filing ethics complaints against a Senator. The bill never was voted on.

It's time for this nonsense to come to an end. Feingold is planning to re-introduce the measure soon. It ought to be processed promptly by the Rules Committee, now chaired by Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.), and pushed to the floor for passage as early in the year as possible so if it's subject to more shenanigans, they can be exposed and resolved.

By Mr. DODD (for himself, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. SCHUMER, Mrs. MCCASKILL, and Mr. BOND):

S. 483. A bill to require the Secretary of the Treasury to mint coins in commemoration of Mark Twain; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Mark Twain Commemorative Coin Act. I am pleased to be joined by Senators LIEBERMAN, BOXER, SCHUMER, MCCASKILL, and BOND in cosponsoring this legislation, which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to mint 100,000 five-dollar gold coins and 500,000 silver dollar coins in a design emblematic of the life and legacy of Mark Twain.

Samuel L. Clemens, better known by his pen name "Mark Twain," was born in 1835 in Florida, Missouri, and died in 1910 while residing in my home State of Connecticut. As many of us know from having read his works, Twain is an iconic author who has left an indelible mark on our Nation's history. Two of his most renowned works, "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer" and "Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," have become a central part of the American literary canon and are still widely read in schools and universities across the country. Another enduring work, entitled "The Gilded Age: A Tale of Today," satirized the excesses of the age during which it was written, and solidified Twain's reputation as a fierce but subtle social critic. His writings evoke discussions of race, politics, and economic inequality, all issues with which our nation continues to struggle as we become a "more perfect union."

This bill will allow the Treasury to mint and issue coins in commemoration of Mark Twain's lasting contributions to America's literary tradition and cultural heritage. A portion of proceeds from surcharges of $35 and $10 applied to each gold and silver coin sold to the public will be distributed by the Treasury to support four institutions critical to the mission of promoting Mark Twain's legacy: The Mark Twain House & Museum in Hartford, CT; the Mark Twain Project at the Bancroft Library of the University of California, in Berkeley, CA; the Center for Mark Twain Studies at Elmira College, in New York; and the Mark Twain Boyhood Home & Museum in Hannibal, MO.

The Mark Twain House and Museum in Hartford, CT, is a national historic landmark. Each year, over 60,000 visitors flock there, many of them from outside my home State. This site offers a unique experience to all who visit, and serves as a center for educating young and old alike about Mark Twain's life and legacy. However, as recent news articles have reported, the Mark Twain House and Museum has—not unlike many other nonprofit entities across the country in the midst of the economic downturn—struggled to cover operating costs solely on private donations, and the financial challenges it currently faces are substantial. Passing this legislation will help to support the continued operation and restoration of the Mark Twain House, and promote its goals by honoring Mark Twain with a commemorative coin desirable to coin collectors as well as enthusiasts of American history and literature.

Congressman JOHN LARSON of Connecticut is introducing companion legislation today in the House of Representatives. As a procedural matter, the House Financial Services Committee requires no less than 290 cosponsors for any commemorative coin bill to come under committee consideration, and similar cosponsorship rules are in place for the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs. Moreover, the House adheres to a tradition of interpreting commemorative coin bills as "revenue-raisers" subject to the origination clause of the U.S. Constitution. Passing the Mark Twain Commemorative Coin Act through both Houses will require no small amount of effort, but today marks an important first step as we put this legislative proposal forward and begin to generate broad public support for the effort. Once Congressman LARSON's companion bill meets the necessary requirements and is adopted by the full House, I intend to press it forward here in the Senate.

The legislation I am introducing will require broad bipartisan support to meet the high threshold for commemorative coin legislation established by the rules of the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, so I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this legislation and join me in supporting the life and legacy of Mark Twain, as well as the important places in our Nation that promote further study and education on his significant contributions to American history.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

By Mrs. FEINSTEIN (for herself, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. BROWN, Mr. CARDIN, Mrs. BOXER, Mrs. LINCOLN, Mr. WHITEHOUSE, Mr. NELSON of Florida, and Mr. MENENDEZ):

S. 484. A bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to repeal the Government pension offset and windfall elimination provisions; to the Committee on Finance.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation that will help protect the retirement benefits earned by our Nation's public service workers.

I am pleased to be joined by my colleague from Maine, Senator COLLINS, as well as Senators DURBIN, KERRY, BROWN, CARDIN, BOXER, LINCOLN, WHITEHOUSE, NELSON of Florida, and MENENDEZ.

This bill will repeal two provisions of the Social Security Act—the Government pension offset and the windfall elimination provision—that unfairly reduce retirement benefits for teachers, police officers, and firefighters.

These two provisions were originally designed—the Government pension offset in 1977 and the windfall elimination provision in 1983—to prevent public employees from being unduly enriched.

But, the practical effect is that those providing critical public services are unjustly penalized.

Approximately 1½ million Federal, State, and municipal workers, as well as teachers and other school district employees, are held to a different standard when it comes to retirement benefits.

In California, the problem affects about 200,000 workers.

The Government pension offset reduces a public employee's Social Security spousal or survivor benefits by an amount equal to two-thirds of the individual's public pension.

In most cases, the Government pension offset eliminates the spousal benefit for which an individual qualifies. Three quarters of employees affected by the Government pension offset lose their entire spousal benefit, even though their spouse paid Social Security taxes for many years.

According to the Congressional Research Service, the Government pension offset provision alone reduces the retirement benefits earned by nearly 500,000 Americans each year by an average of $500 per month.

The windfall elimination provision reduces Social Security benefits by up to 50 percent for retirees who have paid into Social Security and also receive a public pension, such as from a State teacher retirement fund.

Private-sector retirees receive monthly Social Security checks equal to 90 percent of their first $744 in average monthly career earnings, plus 32 percent of monthly earnings up to $4,483 and 15 percent of earnings above $4,483.

Under the windfall elimination provision, retired public employees, however, are only allowed to receive 40 percent of the first $744 in career monthly earnings, a penalty of over $350 per month.

Our legislation will allow government pensioners the chance to earn the same 90 percent to which nongovernment pension recipients are entitled.

For those living on fixed incomes, in some cases this represents the difference between a comfortable retirement and poverty.

Americans are hurting as our economy continues to contract.

More than $4 trillion in retirement savings were lost last year as markets destabilized and investments soured.

Retirees on fixed incomes have been especially impacted by this recession. Every dollar matters to a retiree struggling to pay bills and meet mortgage obligations.

In California, more than 837,000 foreclosures were filed last year. The roughly $500 lost by beneficiaries to the Government pension offset each month may mean the difference between foreclosure and keeping one's home.

This is also critical for seniors residing in assisted living facilities or retirement communities concerned about paying the increasingly high cost of care.

Our Nation's unemployment rate stands at 7.6 percent. And, in my State, over 1.7 million people are out of work. For those close to retirement who have lost their jobs, reductions in Social Security benefits compound an already challenging situation.

We must also eliminate the barriers which discourage many Americans from pursuing careers in public service.

This is more difficult now than ever, as states face mounting deficits and painful budget cuts. Communities must be able to retain their most qualified teachers, police officers, and firefighters.

Unfortunately, the Government pension offset and windfall elimination provision only contribute to this problem at a time when we should be doing everything we possibly can to bring the best and brightest to these careers.

It is estimated that schools will need to hire between 1.7 million and 2.7 million new teachers nationwide by the end of this year because of record enrollments in public schools.

The projected retirements of thousands of veteran teachers and critical efforts to reduce class sizes also necessitate hiring additional teachers.

California currently has roughly 310,000 teachers but will need to double this number over the next decade, to 600,000 teachers, in order to keep up with student enrollment levels.

It is counterintuitive that on the one-hand, policymakers seek to encourage people to change careers and enter the teaching profession, while on the other hand, those wishing to do so are told that their retirement benefits will be significantly reduced.

I certainly recognize that our Federal budget deficit and national debt make repealing the Government pension offset and windfall elimination provision difficult.

And, I remain open to considering any alternatives that will allow hard working employees to keep the Social Security benefits to which they are entitled.

But the bottom line is that we should respect, not penalize, our public service employees.

In the 110th Congress, 38 Senators joined me in cosponsoring this legislation. In the House of Representatives, 351 Members of Congress supported Representative HOWARD BERMAN's companion bill. Our bill enjoys the support of more than three quarters of the entire House of Representatives.

The reason for this support is because public servants across the country are calling on Congress to act.

It is long overdue that we resolve this inequity, and it is time that this body protects retirement benefits for public employees and formulates a more cohesive approach to promoting public sector employment.

So I hope that my colleagues will join me in protecting the retirement benefits of our Nation's hard working public servants. We value their contributions and must ensure that all Americans receive the retirement benefits they have earned and deserve.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I am pleased to be joining my colleague from California, Senator FEINSTEIN, in introducing the Social Security Fairness Act, which repeals both the windfall elimination provision, WEP, and the Government pension offset, GPO. We believe that these two provisions in the Social Security Act unfairly penalize individuals for holding jobs in public service when the time comes for them to retire.

These two provisions have enormous financial implications for many of our teachers, police officers, firefighters, postal workers and other public employees. Given their important responsibilities, it is simply unfair to penalize them when it comes to their Social Security benefits. These public servants—or their spouses—have all paid taxes into the Social Security system. So have their employers. They have worked long enough to earn their Social Security benefits. Yet because of the GPO and WEP, they are unable to receive all of the Social Security benefits to which they otherwise would be entitled.

The impact of these two provisions is most acute in 15 States, including Maine, which have State retirement plans that lack a Social Security component. However, it is important to point out that the GPO and WEP affect public employees and retirees in every State, and in particular our emergency responders, our postal workers and our other Federal employees. Nationwide, more than one-third of teachers and education employees, and more than one-fifth of other public employees, are affected by the GPO and/or the WEP.

Almost 1 million retired public employees across the country have already been harmed by these provisions. Many more stand to be harmed in the future. Moreover, at a time when we should be doing all that we can to attract qualified people to public service, this reduction in retirement benefits makes it even more difficult for our Federal, State and local governments to recruit and retain the public servants who are so critical to the safety and well-being of our families.

What is most troubling is that this offset is most harsh for those who can least afford the loss: lower income women. In fact, of those affected by the GPO, over 70 percent are women. According to the Congressional Budget Office, the GPO reduces benefits for more than 200,000 individuals by more than $3,600 a year—an amount that can make the difference between a comfortable retirement and poverty.

Many Maine teachers, in particular, have talked with me about the impact of these provisions on their retirement security. They love their jobs and the children they teach, but they worry about the future and about their financial security.

In September of 2003, I chaired an oversight hearing to examine the effect that the GPO and the WEP have had on public employees and retirees. We heard compelling testimony from Julia Worcester of Columbia, ME, who was then 73. Mrs. Worcester told the committee about her work in both Social Security-covered employment and as a Maine teacher, and about the effect that the GPO and WEP have had on her income in retirement.

Mrs. Worcester had worked for more than 20 years as a waitress and in factory jobs before deciding, at the age of 49, to go back to school to pursue her life-long dream of becoming a teacher. She began teaching at the age of 52 and taught full-time for 15 years before retiring at the age of 68. Since she was only in the Maine State retirement system for 15 years, Mrs. Worcester does not receive a full State pension. Yet she is still subject to the full penalties under the GPO and WEP. As a consequence, even though she worked hard and paid into the Social Security system for more than 20 years, she receives less than $800 a month in total pension income.

After a lifetime of hard work, Mrs. Worcester, who turns 78 next month, is still substitute teaching just to make ends meet. She cannot afford to stop working. This simply is not right.

It is time for us to take action, and I urge all of my colleagues to join us in cosponsoring the Social Security Fairness Act to eliminate these two unfair provisions.

SENATE RESOLUTION 55—DESIGNATING EACH OF FEBRUARY 4, 2009, AND FEBRUARY 3, 2010, AS “NATIONAL WOMEN AND GIRLS IN SPORTS DAY”

Ms. SNOWE (for herself, Mrs. MURRAY, and Ms. MIKULSKI) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 55

Whereas women's athletics are one of the most effective avenues available for the women of the United States to develop self-discipline, initiative, confidence, and leadership skills;

Whereas sports and fitness activities contribute to emotional and physical well-being;

Whereas women need strong bodies as well as strong minds;

Whereas the history of women in sports is rich and long, but there has been little national recognition of the significance of the athletic achievements of women;

Whereas the number of women in leadership positions as coaches, officials, and administrators has declined drastically since the passage of title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 (Public Law 92-318; 86 Stat. 373);

Whereas there is a need to restore women to leadership positions in athletics to ensure a fair representation of the abilities of women and to provide role models for young female athletes;

Whereas the bonds built between women through athletics help to break down the social barriers of racism and prejudice;

Whereas the communication and cooperation skills learned through athletic experience play a key role in the contributions of an athlete to her home, workplace, and society;

Whereas women's athletics has produced such winners as Flo Hyman, whose spirit, talent, and accomplishments distinguished her above others and who exhibited the true meaning of fairness, determination, and team play;

Whereas parents feel that sports are equally important for boys and girls and that sports and fitness activities provide important benefits to girls who participate;

Whereas early motor-skill training and enjoyable experiences of physical activity strongly influence life-long habits of physical fitness;

Whereas the performances of female athletes in the Olympic Games are a source of inspiration and pride to the people of the United States;

Whereas the athletic opportunities for male students at the collegiate and high school levels remain significantly greater than those for female students; and

Whereas the number of funded research projects focusing on the specific needs of women athletes is limited and the information provided by these projects is imperative to the health and performance of future women athletes: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates each of February 4, 2009, and February 3, 2010, as “National Women and Girls in Sports Day”; and

(2) encourages State and local jurisdictions, appropriate Federal agencies, and the people of the United States to observe "National Women and Girls in Sports Day" with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

SENATE RESOLUTION 56—URGING THE GOVERNMENT OF MOLDOVA TO ENSURE A FAIR AND DEMOCRATIC ELECTION PROCESS FOR THE PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS ON APRIL 5, 2009

Mr. LUGAR submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 56

Whereas Senate Resolution 60, 110th Congress, agreed to February 17, 2005, expressed the support of the Senate for democratic reform in Moldova and urged the Government of Moldova to ensure a democratic and fair election process for the parliamentary elections on March 6, 2005, by ensuring "unimpeded access by all parties and candidates to print, radio, television, and Internet media on a nondiscriminatory basis" and "the right of opposition candidates and workers to engage in campaigning free of harassment, discrimination, and intimidation";

Whereas the Election Observation Mission of the Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights of the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) found that, while the parliamentary elections in 2005 generally complied with most of the OSCE commitments and other international standards, "they fell short of some that are central to a genuinely competitive election process", in particular "campaign conditions and access to media", confirming the "negative trends already noted in the 2003 local elections";

Whereas the Election Observation Mission found that the local elections held in June 2007 in Moldova were generally well administered but "fell short of a number of OSCE commitments central to a competitive electoral process," in particular by not fully respecting "the right of citizens to seek public office and equitable media access";

Whereas Freedom House, a non-profit, non-partisan organization working to advance the expansion of freedom, again in 2008 designated the political environment of Moldova as only "partly free";

Whereas political liberties and civil rights are key indicators of eligibility for support from the Millennium Challenge Corporation, an entity of the United States Government, which is now considering a sizeable grant for the economic and political development of Moldova; and

Whereas recent actions by entities of the Government of Moldova raise serious questions about the readiness of the Government of Moldova to break free from the unfortunate patterns established in the elections in 2003, 2005, and 2007 and to create the campaign conditions and access to media required for truly free and fair elections: Now, therefore, be it

(1) reaffirms the strong, mutually beneficial relationship that exists between the United States Government and the Government of Moldova;

(2) recognizes that the development of a genuinely democratic political system in Moldova is a precondition for the full integration of Moldova into the Western community of nations and the provision of assistance necessary to attain such integration;

(3) urges the Government of Moldova to meet its commitments to the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe, especially in respect to the conduct of elections, by guaranteeing—

(A) unimpeded access by all parties and candidates to public print, radio, television, and Internet media on a nondiscriminatory basis;

(B) the ability of independent media to cover campaigns on an unrestricted basis;

(C) the right of opposition candidates and workers to engage in campaigning free of harassment, discrimination, and intimidation; and

(D) adequate means for citizens of Moldova residing abroad to cast their ballots; and

(4) in light of the steps taken by the Government of Moldova, pledges the continued support of the United States Government for the establishment in Moldova of a fully free and democratic system, the creation of a prosperous market economy, and the assumption by Moldova of its rightful place as a full and equal member of the Western community of democracies.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, today I submit a resolution urging the Government of Moldova to ensure a fair and democratic election process for the upcoming parliamentary elections on April 5, 2009.

Since independence in 1991, Moldova has made notable progress in establishing a democratic political system and a free market economy. However, the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe, OSCE, has reported that recent rounds of parliamentary elections have fallen short on a number of international election standards.

In 2005, the Senate passed a Resolution expressing our support for democratic reform in Moldova and urging the Government of Moldova to ensure unimpeded access by all parties and candidates to all media outlets in the run-up to the 2005 parliamentary elections. While the OSCE found that the 2005 elections generally complied with international standards, it found that "campaign conditions and access to media" fell short of these standards. The OSCE reported similar circumstances following the 2007 parliamentary elections, including a lack of "equitable media access" among the candidates.

This Resolution re-affirms the United States Senate's support for political reform and fair democratic processes with our partners in Moldova. It urges the Government of Moldova to recognize the importance of guaranteeing all election candidates equitable access to media outlets in Moldova for the April 2009 elections. This will be an important consideration for receiving a Compact from the Millennium Challenge Corporation and for Moldova's full integration as a member of the Western community of democracies.

I ask my colleagues to support this resolution.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 8—EXPRESSING SUPPORT FOR CHILDREN'S DENTAL HEALTH MONTH AND HONORING THE MEMORY OF DEAMONTE DRIVER

Mr. CARDIN (for himself, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Ms. MIKULSKI, and Mr. BINGAMAN) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. CON. RES. 8

Whereas several national dental organizations have observed February 2009 as Children's Dental Health Month;

Whereas Deamonte Driver, a 12-year-old Marylander, died on February 25, 2007, of complications resulting from untreated tooth decay;

Whereas the passing of Deamonte Driver has led to increased awareness nationwide about the importance of access to high-quality, affordable preventative care and treatment for dental problems;

Whereas the primary purpose of Children's Dental Health Month is to educate parents, children, and the public about the importance and value of oral health;

Whereas Children's Dental Health Month showcases the overwhelmingly preventable nature of tooth decay and highlights the fact that tooth decay is on the rise among the youngest children in the Nation;

Whereas Children's Dental Health Month educates the public about the treatment of childhood dental caries, cleft-palate, oral facial trauma, and oral cancer through public service announcements, seminars, briefings, and the pro bono initiatives of practitioners and academic dental institutions;

Whereas Children's Dental Health Month was created to raise awareness about the importance of oral health; and

Whereas Children's Dental Health Month is an opportunity for the public and health professionals to take action to prevent childhood dental problems and improve access to high-quality dental care: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Congress expresses support for Children's Dental Health Month and honors the life of Deamonte Driver.

TITLE —SECOND AMENDMENT ENFORCEMENT ACT

SEC. .01. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the “Second Amendment Enforcement Act”.

SEC. .02. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) The Second Amendment to the United States Constitution provides that the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed.

(2) As the Congress and the Supreme Court of the United States have recognized, the Second Amendment to the United States Constitution protects the rights of individuals, including those who are not members of a militia or engaged in military service or training, to keep and bear arms.

(3) The law-abiding citizens of the District of Columbia are deprived by local laws of handguns, rifles, and shotguns that are commonly kept by law-abiding persons throughout the United States for sporting use and for lawful defense of their persons, homes, businesses, and families.

(4) The District of Columbia has the highest per capita murder rate in the Nation, which may be attributed in part to local laws prohibiting possession of firearms by law-abiding persons who would otherwise be able to defend themselves and their loved ones in their own homes and businesses.

(5) The Federal Gun Control Act of 1968, as amended by the Firearms Owners’ Protection Act of 1986, and the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act of 1993, provide comprehensive Federal regulations applicable in the District of Columbia as elsewhere. In addition, existing District of Columbia criminal laws punish possession and illegal use of firearms by violent criminals and felons. Consequently, there is no need for local laws which only affect and disarm law-abiding citizens.

(6) Officials of the District of Columbia have indicated their intention to continue to unduly restrict lawful firearm possession and use by citizens of the District.

(7) Legislation is required to correct the District of Columbia’s law in order to restore the fundamental rights of its citizens under the Second Amendment to the United States Constitution and thereby enhance public safety.

SEC. 03. REFORM D.C. COUNCIL'S AUTHORITY TO RESTRICT FIREARMS.

Section 4 of the Act entitled "An Act to prohibit the killing of wild birds and wild animals in the District of Columbia", approved June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. 809; sec. 1-303.43, D.C. Official Code) is amended by adding at the end the following: "Nothing in this section or any other provision of law shall authorize, or shall be construed to permit, the Council, the Mayor, or any governmental or regulatory authority of the District of Columbia to prohibit, constructively prohibit, or unduly burden the ability of persons not prohibited from possessing firearms under Federal law from acquiring, possessing in their homes or businesses, or using for sporting, self-protection or other lawful purposes, any firearm neither prohibited by Federal law nor subject to the National Firearms Act. The District of Columbia shall not have authority to enact laws or regulations that discourage or eliminate the private ownership or use of firearms. Nothing in the previous two sentences shall be construed to prohibit the District of Columbia from regulating or prohibiting the carrying of firearms by a person, either concealed or openly, other than at the person's dwelling place, place of business, or on other land possessed by the person."

SEC. 04. REPEAL D.C. SEMIAUTOMATIC BAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 101(10) of the Firearms Control Regulations Act of 1975 (sec. 7-2501.01(10), D.C. Official Code) is amended to read as follows:

SECOND AMENDMENT ENFORCEMENT ACT

SEC. 01. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Second Amendment Enforcement Act".

SEC. 02. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) The Second Amendment to the United States Constitution provides that the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed.

(2) As the Congress and the Supreme Court of the United States have recognized, the Second Amendment to the United States Constitution protects the rights of individuals, including those who are not members of a militia or engaged in military service or training, to keep and bear arms.

(3) The law-abiding citizens of the District of Columbia are deprived by local laws of handguns, rifles, and shotguns that are commonly kept by law-abiding persons throughout the United States for sporting use and for lawful defense of their persons, homes, businesses, and families.

(4) The District of Columbia has the highest per capita murder rate in the Nation, which may be attributed in part to local laws prohibiting possession of firearms by law-abiding persons who would otherwise be able to defend themselves and their loved ones in their own homes and businesses.

(5) The Federal Gun Control Act of 1968, as amended by the Firearms Owners' Protection Act of 1986, and the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act of 1993, provide comprehensive Federal regulations applicable in the District of Columbia as elsewhere. In addition, existing District of Columbia criminal laws punish possession and illegal use of firearms by violent criminals and felons. Consequently, there is no need for local laws which only affect and disarm law-abiding citizens.

(6) Officials of the District of Columbia have indicated their intention to continue to unduly restrict lawful firearm possession and use by citizens of the District.

(7) Legislation is required to correct the District of Columbia's law in order to restore the fundamental rights of its citizens under the Second Amendment to the United States Constitution and thereby enhance public safety.

SEC. 03. REFORM D.C. COUNCIL'S AUTHORITY TO RESTRICT FIREARMS.

Section 4 of the Act entitled "An Act to prohibit the killing of wild birds and wild animals in the District of Columbia", approved June 30, 1906 (34 Stat. 809; sec. 1-303.43, D.C. Official Code) is amended by adding at the end the following: "Nothing in this section or any other provision of law shall authorize, or shall be construed to permit, the Council, the Mayor, or any governmental or regulatory authority of the District of Columbia to prohibit, constructively prohibit, or unduly burden the ability of persons not prohibited from possessing firearms under Federal law from acquiring, possessing in their homes or businesses, or using for sporting, self-protection or other lawful purposes, any firearm neither prohibited by Federal law nor subject to the National Firearms Act. The District of Columbia shall not have authority to enact laws or regulations that discourage or eliminate the private ownership or use of firearms. Nothing in the previous two sentences shall be construed to prohibit the District of Columbia from regulating or prohibiting the carrying of firearms by a person, either concealed or openly, other than at the person's dwelling place, place of business, or on other land possessed by the person."

The concurrent resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. CON. RES. 8

Whereas several national dental organizations have observed February 2009 as Children's Dental Health Month;

Whereas Deamonte Driver, a 12-year-old Marylander, died on February 25, 2007, of complications resulting from untreated tooth decay;

Whereas the passing of Deamonte Driver has led to increased awareness nationwide about the importance of access to high-quality, affordable preventative care and treatment for dental problems;

Whereas the primary purpose of Children's Dental Health Month is to educate parents, children, and the public about the importance and value of oral health;

Whereas Children's Dental Health Month showcases the overwhelmingly preventable nature of tooth decay and highlights the fact that tooth decay is on the rise among the youngest children in the Nation;

Whereas Children's Dental Health Month educates the public about the treatment of childhood dental caries, cleft-palate, oral facial trauma, and oral cancer through public service announcements, seminars, briefings, and the pro bono initiatives of practitioners and academic dental institutions;

Whereas Children's Dental Health Month was created to raise awareness about the importance of oral health; and

Whereas Children's Dental Health Month is an opportunity for the public and health professionals to take action to prevent childhood dental problems and improve access to high-quality dental care: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Congress expresses support for Children's Dental Health Month and honors the life of Deamonte Driver.

MEASURES READ THE FIRST TIME—S. 478, S. 482, H.R. 1105

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I have been led to believe there are three bills at the desk. If that is the case, I ask for their first reading en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the titles of the bills for the first time, en bloc.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 478) to amend the National Labor Relations Act to ensure the right of employees to a secret-ballot election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board.

A bill (S. 482) to require Senate candidates to file designations, statements, and reports in electronic form.

A bill (H.R. 1105) making omnibus appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2009, and for other purposes.

Mr. REID. I now ask for a second reading en bloc on these matters, but I also object at the same time to my own request, en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been heard, the bills will receive their second reading on the next legislative day.

ORDERS FOR THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 2009

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand adjourned until 9:30 a.m. tomorrow, February 26; that following the prayer and pledge, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed expired, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate resume consideration of S. 160, the District of Columbia House Voting Rights Act, as under the previous order that has already been entered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. REID. As I indicated earlier, Senators should expect rollcall votes throughout the day as we work to complete action on the DC House Voting Rights Act. The first vote of the day is expected to begin at 10:30 in relation to the Kyl amendment regarding retrocession.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. REID. If there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that it stand adjourned under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 7:25 p.m., adjourned until Thursday, February 26, 2009, at 9:30 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, February 25, 2009

The House met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. HOLDEN).

DESIGNATION OF THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
February 25, 2009.

I hereby appoint the Honorable TIM HOLDEN to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

NANCY PELOSI,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer:

With our eyes fixed firmly on the coming of spring and on You, the creator of the whole universe, we resolve to hold fast to lasting values and the transcendent gifts of peace because of Your many blessings upon this Nation.

Yet we are called to renew our sense of equal justice and our equilibrium in a globalized world. Let the changes we embrace as disciplines because we are disciples in faith build our confidence in the future.

May prayer lift us beyond self-interest. May fasting bring us to the freedom to say, "That's enough." May our prayer and fasting lead us to greater compassion for others and great deeds of charity for those most in need. Since we are created in Your own image and likeness, we see You reflected in all Your people, especially those whom we serve in Your holy name.

Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8, rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SAM JOHNSON) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain up to 15 requests for 1-minute speeches on each side of the aisle.

INCREASE REVENUE TO BALANCE THIS BUDGET

(Mr. MORAN of Virginia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, America is blessed to be led by the most eloquent spokesperson on the planet, but Barack Obama very well knows, as we do, that it's not enough to talk the talk, you have to walk the walk. The first step on that very rocky road begins tomorrow with the budget submission.

If the private sector is not willing to make the loans, to start the businesses, to hire the people necessary to get this economy back on its feet, then the public sector has to step up to the plate. But if we are going to be faithful to our children's future, then we are going to have to pay for the cost of this stimulus package and this budget submission, and that means that we are going to have to increase revenue so that we can ultimately balance this budget.

Democrats did that during the Clinton administration, and it worked, we generated budget surpluses and people at the highest tax rates brought home more after tax income than at any other time in American history. I know we have the courage to do that today, but the Republican Party also has to come up with a more constructive mantra than just saying "no."

CHANGE OUR PRACTICES ON EARMARKS

(Mr. FLAKE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, it was recently reported by Politico that "FBI agents have spent months laying the groundwork for their current investigation, including conducting research on earmarks and campaign contributions."

With this as a backdrop, today we will consider a privileged resolution asking the Ethics Committee to conduct an investigation. This is not a partisan resolution. It mentions no individual Member of Congress. It mentions no political party.

Over the past few years, we have seen outside investigations lead to indictments and convictions related to earmarks, yet we have done little to change our practices.

Today we will consider an omnibus spending bill containing nearly 9,000 earmarks, many of which are no-bid contracts to private companies, companies whose executives have, in addition to their lobbyists, contributed millions of dollars to Members who secured those earmarks. This simply isn't right.

Mr. Speaker, we owe this institution far more than we are giving it. Let's vote for this privileged resolution and give it the respect and dignity it deserves.

THE PEOPLE'S CHALLENGE

(Mr. BRALEY of Iowa asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BRALEY of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, last night President Obama issued a call to action to the American people, and the American people are responding with a resounding "Yes, we can."

The problems that we face are many and enormous, and yet this is our challenge, it is our responsibility, and there is no better place than the people's House to do the people's business. Whether it's restoring confidence in our faltering financial markets, proping up a credit market that is nonexistent, focusing on the incredible housing problems we face in this country, and at the same time committing investments in our educational system, investments in our health care reform and making sure that we have an energy policy that takes our dependence away from foreign oil and redirects it to renewable energy here in the United States.

This is still the government of the people, by the people and for the people, and this is the people's challenge. The President cannot solve these problems on his own. We are all in this together. It's time for the American people to make a renewed commitment to this country, reinvest in the future of America and inspire us to the new level of responsibility in the world community.

GO TEXAN

(Mr. POE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. POE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this weekend over 4,000 trail riders will be arriving in Houston, Texas, and parade through downtown to kick off the world's largest rodeo and livestock show. These cowboys have been on the trail for days riding from towns all around Texas. With their horses, chuck wagons and barbecue, these riders are a mixture of lawyers, executives, doctors, refinery workers, teachers and kids. There are also some real cowboys.

The Houston Rodeo and Livestock Show started in 1931 when seven men decided over lunch at the Texas State Hotel that this event was needed. The Rodeo and Livestock Show uses 20,000 volunteers and raises over $11 million for scholarships for FFA students from all over Texas. The rodeo has featured such notable entertainers as Gene Autry, Roy Rogers, Elvis, George Strait and every major country singer in the world.

For 15 nights, 50,000 Houstonians "Go Texan" and "Cowboy Up" for not only the world's largest rodeo, but the world's largest barbecue cook-off. All of these events center around Texas Independence Day, March 2. But it is the trail riders that relive the past of the Old West by spending days on the trail that are the ones that start this excitement.

And that's just the way it is.

MEET OUR INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITIES

(Mr. YARMUTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. YARMUTH. Mr. Speaker, I like to think that government is the way that we organize our responsibilities to each other.

Last night, President Obama gave a clear path to explain how this government can help us meet our responsibilities to each other. He mentioned government and laid a groundwork for government, not as a substitute for private initiative and private enterprise, but as a catalyst for private initiative and private enterprise.

As a facilitator and enabler he showed the way that this government can help people realize their ambitions and rebuild America in a much stronger position.

As we move forward in considering the agenda that President Obama has laid out, I hope that we will remember that not only do we call on individual Americans to meet their responsibilities to each other, but that we as Members of Congress meet our individual responsibilities to them and to make this government one that truly stands united in favor of the American people.

This was truly an inspirational charge that we were given last night, and I hope we all listen carefully.

NOW IS NOT THE TIME FOR TAX HIKES

(Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, after just passing a $1 trillion spending plan, the Democrats in Congress claim they will tax and spend our way out of this economic gloom. I believe we should root out government waste before we add new government spending, and we don't want to increase taxes when folks are already feeling pinched by this tough economy.

In the Texas State House, the Speaker threatened to kick me off Ways and Means if I didn't vote to raise taxes. I just said "no." When I didn't vote to raise taxes, they booted me off the committee. What can I say—there were no new taxes in Texas. How about America?

This Congress must approve a Federal spending freeze before we can consider tax hikes during these uncertain economic times. The last thing we need to do is push consumer confidence even lower. Let's take tax hikes off the table.

A CALL FOR ACTION FROM THIS NATION

(Mr. WALZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALZ. Mr. Speaker, last night President Obama issued a call for action from this Nation. He clearly laid out the economic situation that we are in right now, but, more importantly, he laid out a plan for growth, a plan that started a week ago with the passage of the American Reinvestment and Recovery Act.

What it did was it staunched the bleeding of jobs that we were losing at a rate of 600,000 in January, but it made a much more important investment in the future. President Obama laid out his priorities for the next budget, an investment in education, an investment in energy security and an investment in reining in the cost of health care.

I represent the southern Minnesota district that includes the Mayo Clinic. I also represent a district that is a leader in wind production and biofuels, not just nationwide but internationally.

I also had a guest last night, Chuck Ehler, the superintendent of a small school, Rushford-Peterson, in my district. That community was devastated by flooding that had a Federal disaster in 2007. It's a 103-year-old building.

The people and the citizens who will fuel our economic recovery are those citizens trying to learn in a building that will not work. We must invest in the future. That's how we repair our economy.

WE STAND READY TO WORK

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, House Republicans remain ready to tackle the tough challenges facing our Nation. Getting our economy back on track, providing affordable quality education and health care, and protecting American families are of concern to every American and every Member of this body.

But there are differences. On the issue of raising taxes, House Republicans are concerned that this would destroy jobs in an already troubled economy. We oppose plans that will continue to borrow and spend. We believe the American people should keep more of their own money and government should limit its own budget.

Fiscal responsibility must mean we limit spending, not just raise taxes in order to build more government. We stand ready to work with our colleagues to make these tough decisions.

In conclusion, God bless our troops, and we will never forget September the 11th.

GIVE OUR TROOPS THE BEST POSSIBLE CHANCE FOR SUCCESS

(Mr. BRIGHT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, last week I visited Iraq and Afghanistan for the first time as a Member of Congress.

The six-member bipartisan delegation met with soldiers, commanders, Iraqi and Afghanistan leaders and ordinary citizens. Though it was a truly eye-opening experience, it only strengthened my deep respect and gratitude for the men and women who serve in our military. They have always performed bravely and done everything we have asked them to do.

As we were in the Middle East, the President announced that an additional 17,000 troops would be sent to Afghanistan. Based on my observations in Afghanistan, a strengthened American presence is badly needed, along with a strong coalition. However, there should be a clear sense of mission with measurable goals in order to give our troops the best possible chance for success.

I look forward to working on the Armed Services Committee to ensure that we meet these goals and that our troops are always given the resources they need.

MONKEY BITE BILL

(Mr. BISHOP of Utah asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BISHOP of Utah. Mr. Speaker, yesterday in this House we passed a monkey bite bill, and whether one agrees with me that we spent millions of dollars to create a bureaucracy that does not solve the problem is insignificant.

What is significant is one considers the time we spent last year and this year. It is arguably the case that we have spent more time on this floor talking about monkey bites than we have in talking about a $400 billion spending package.

The President was exactly right last night when he said Americans will work their way through the situation, but history will judge whether the actions of this House have hindered or helped Americans in that quest to work their way through this situation and, indeed, the verdict may be mixed. But history will not forgive us if we abdicate our responsibility to be representatives of the people and know the details of the bills that come to the floor.

History will not forgive us if we simply declare an emergency and then wave our hands as billions and billions of American tax dollars just simply pass us by. Shame on us.

HONESTY CONCERNING THE BUDGET

(Mr. PALLONE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, when I listen to some of the comments from my colleagues on the Republican side, I am surprised by the remarks they make about tax increases. If you look at the economic recovery package, it actually has one of the biggest tax cuts in this Nation's history. For most people, unless they are at $200,000 or above for a couple, something like that, they will actually be seeing a tax decrease or a tax cut as a result of the economic recovery package.

The President is being very honest about the budget. If you listened to him for the first time now, if you compare him to the previous administration, the budget is going to increase the actual cost of the Iraq war and the actual cost of Medicare reimbursements. A lot of those things were previously hidden.

In addition to that, most importantly, he talked about the need for deficit reduction. Yes, in fact we are spending money as part of the economic recovery package. We are giving tax cuts, and that does increase the deficit. But over the long term, over the 4 years, the goal is to cut the deficit in half.

It is a very responsible message that he gave last night; short-term efforts to achieve economic recovery, long-term efforts to reduce the deficit.

LESS GOVERNMENT AND REAL SPENDING REFORM NEEDED

(Mr. FLEMING asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, last night we heard the President in this very Chamber make the call for Congress to rise above the politics and to work together for the benefit of the American people, even though this side of the aisle has been shut out of virtually all related legislation.

The President called for fiscal responsibility, and I couldn't agree more. But I am perplexed that he would make this call sandwiched between the biggest wasteful bills that the liberals in Congress have ever submitted. We need to stop the runaway spending to fund programs that don't immediately put this country back on track for economic stability and which create even more deficits in years to come.

It is very foolish to spend heavily on an unprecedented number of earmarks, only to attempt to balance the budget on the backs of small businesses and those who work and save. Governor Jindal pointed out in his response how effective less government, less spending, and real government reform can be in my home State of Louisiana.

I say that instead of increasing dependence on government to run our daily lives, I strongly suggest that we let the entrepreneurial spirit and the work ethic of Americans with real leadership from Congress create the pathway out of our economic problems.

CONGRESS IS INVESTING IN THE FUTURE

(Mr. CONNOLLY of Virginia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CONNOLLY of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise to address our current economic crisis and the critical need for a budget that offers hope and confidence to the American people.

My colleagues and our citizens understand our Nation's dire fiscal crisis. Our Gross Domestic Product continues to shrink; auto sales are the worst in decades; personal incomes are declining and job losses continue to alarm us daily. In my own district, one of the Nation's most affluent, demand for food stamps has grown 73 percent over the last year, and local officials say the need is much greater and many simply do not apply.

Home values, the largest source of wealth in my district, have declined by as much 32 percent. These are staggering declines. Through September of 2008, there were thousands of foreclosures in Prince William and Fairfax Counties. Stock in Washington metropolitan businesses has declined 41 percent in 2008, a tremendous decrease in value.

However, there is hope. President Obama outlined a vision last night for long-term financial stability. The significant investment in infrastructure, the expansion of the green economy, the call to bring fiscal sanity back to health care embodied in the President's message bodes well for the future. I support his economic endeavor.

THE BEST SOLUTIONS COME FROM MAIN STREET, NOT PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE

(Mrs. McMORRIS RODGERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. McMORRIS RODGERS. Mr. Speaker, last night the Chamber was full as President Obama outlined his priorities to solve the challenges that face America. And no matter the issue, I think it is so important that we remember that the best solutions come from Main Street, and not from Pennsylvania Avenue.

The biggest challenge that our Nation faces is the economy. Growing and expanding our economy starts with true tax relief that allows middle-class families and small businesses to keep more of their hard-earned money. It also involves investing in infrastructure and workforce so that we will be competitive.

Today we are scheduled to begin debate on the budget bill. Unfortunately, this bill is loaded with earmarks, over 9,000. One business owner in Spokane recently asked me, "Do you in Washington, D.C. get it? Do you understand that small businesses, families, are having to tighten their belt, make tough decisions?"

We heard the call last night to start living within our means, and I applaud

President Obama's commitment to reducing our national debt, just like families and small businesses have to do with their budgets. Now is the time for both parties to back up their promises for fiscal discipline.

I believe that the best solutions come when Republicans and Democrats work together. I look forward to working with Republicans and Democrats to solve these issues.

PUTTING NATIONAL SECURITY IN PERIL FOR POLITICAL EXPEDENCY

(Mr. HUNTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, since Mr. Obama became the President, the economy has been his focus. But through executive orders and not so subtle hints in recent speeches, his administration has put some effort into making America less safe than it was 2 years ago.

Some examples: Throwing out the case against the USS Cole bomber; the closing down of Guantanamo; limiting our interrogation techniques; cutting defense spending; and announcing a troop surge in Afghanistan without the proper infrastructure or funding to support it.

The French just today released five terrorists that the United States released to them for prosecution. If even one of the brave men and women who carry the burden of our security on their shoulders in Iraq and Afghanistan are harmed by the fact that American operatives can no longer get timely information from the enemy through interrogation or are attacked by a prisoner released because of the closing of Guantanamo, if even one of our men and women in uniform pay the ultimate price for these reasons, it will be a sacrifice made so that President Obama can score political points with the liberal fringe of his party.

I am a United States Marine and I served in Iraq and Afghanistan, and I will not stand by while our national security is put in peril for political expediency. Let us not betray those who sacrifice for our freedom.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. LYNCH) and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. POE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LYNCH. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform, I am pleased to join my colleagues and stand in full support of the consideration of House Resolution 47, which calls for Congress to recognize the goals and ideals of Peace Officers Memorial Day, which is commemorated on May 15th of each year during what is referred to as National Police Week. House Resolution 47 was introduced by our colleague Representative TED POE of Texas on January 9, 2009, and was considered by and reported from the Oversight Committee on February 11th, 2009, by a voice vote.

The measure has the support and co-sponsorship of nearly 70 Members of Congress and is designed to acknowledge the work and commitment of more than 900,000 sworn law enforcement officers now serving throughout our great nation. Daily, these selfless men and women place their lives on the line, confronting great risk and challenges in their service to our communities and our fellow citizens, which is why it is so befitting for us to consider the measure at hand, House Resolution 47, supporting the goals and ideals of Peace Officers Memorial Day.

Over the course of 2008, our country lost nearly 180 law enforcement officers in the line of duty. In remembrance of these fallen heroes, today we in the House of Representatives take a moment to express our gratitude for the service of these courageous Americans by considering House Resolution 47.

By supporting the goals and ideals of Peace Officers Memorial Day, we are sending a strong message to our country's law enforcement community and their families that we recognize the sacrifices they have made in the name of safety and security for all of our cities, townships and localities.

I would like to specifically mention and thank those officers that serve throughout Bristol, Suffolk, Plymouth and Norfolk Counties in my own congressional district for their great work.

Commemorating Peace Officers Memorial Day dates back to 1962, when then President Kennedy signed Public Law 87-726 designating May 15th as Peace Officers Memorial Day and the week in which May 15 falls as National Police Week. Since that time, Congress has routinely expressed our support for the goals and ideals of this worthy cause.

I would like to again thank our colleague from Texas, Mr. POE, for reintroducing this year's measure honoring the work of our Nation's police officers, many of whom I might add will now be able to stay on the job because of the recent enactment of the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act.

Mr. Speaker, in the coming months, Peace Officers Memorial Day will be celebrated across our great land with various events, memorials and programs, all designed to highlight the work of these great Americans. In closing, let us too join in the commemoration of our country's law enforcement officers by agreeing to pass House Resolution 47.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. POE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H. Res. 47, supporting the goals and ideals of Peace Officers Memorial Day. Each year, the President issues a proclamation naming May the 15th as National Peace Officers Memorial Day. I decided to introduce this piece of legislation again because I believe that Congress should pay the tribute to the brave men and women who proudly serve us as law enforcement officers.

Americans have been protected by peace officers for now 217 years, and it all goes back to the early settlers in Boston that established a program called "night watch" to safeguard their citizens.

Not a day goes by that law enforcement officers do not face danger in their mission to keep us safe from crime, acts of violence and now terrorism. On May 17, 1792, New York City's Deputy Sheriff Isaac Smith, became the first recorded peace officer to be killed in the line of duty. Since that time, 18,340 peace officers have been killed while on the job. Each year, over 50,000 police officers are assaulted, and in 2008, 140 of these brave officers were killed protecting their fellow Americans. Of these 140 officers, 10 percent, 14, are from my home State of Texas.

A quote by President George H.W. Bush is engraved on the National Law Enforcement Officers Memorial located in Washington, DC that summarizes the mission of the 900,000 current sworn peace officers in this country. It states that it is an officer's "continuing quest to preserve both democracy and decency and to protect a national treasure that we call the American dream." It is clear this quest is worthy of the respect that our citizens show for their peace officers.

In paying homage to these fallen heroes, we are once again reminded that in 1961 Congress created Peace Officers Memorial Day and designated it to be commemorated each year on May 15th. This yearly tribute to peace officers provides each of us with an opportunity to honor those who lost their lives while protecting the citizens of this country.

Thousands of visitors pay respect to our peace officers at the National Law Enforcement Memorial on May 15th. On May 15th of this year, a flag will be flown at half staff, as it always is on that date, to show respect and gratitude for the fallen peace officers who have made the ultimate sacrifice for our citizens.

We appreciate with gratitude all of the peace officers for their dedication and their sacrifice. During my 20 years as a judge in Texas, I had the absolute privilege of working alongside some of America's finest peace officers. Some of those have been killed in the line of duty. Now, as founder and cochair of the Congressional Victims Rights Caucus, I recognize that unfortunately peace officers are too victims, as many citizens are.

And they are actually, Mr. Speaker, the last strand of wire in the fence between the law and those that violate the law. I'm grateful for the brave and selfless service of this Nation's peace officers.

With that, I ask all Members to join me in support of H. Res. 47.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LYNCH. We continue to reserve. We have no further speakers.

Mr. POE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would like to recognize two gentlemen that not too long ago in this Capitol, the People's House, on July 28, 1998, Jacob Chestnut and John Michael Gibson, Capitol police officers, while we were having a memorial ceremony here in the Rotunda, these two officers protected the lives of other Members of the House of Representatives, and because of that, both of them were killed in the line of duty. So they are two of many peace officers that gave up their lives for the rest of us.

I mentioned that there were 14 peace officers from the State of Texas that were killed last year. Mr. Speaker. They are:

Deputy Constable David Joubert from the Harris County Constable's Office.

Police Officer Matthew Thebeau from the Corpus Christi Police Department.

Corporal Harry Thielepape from the Harris County Constable's Office.

Senior Corporal Victor Lozada, Sr. from the Dallas Police Department.

State Trooper James Burns from the Highway Patrol in Huntsville, Texas.

Police Officer Everett Dennis from the Carthage Police Department.

Sheriff Brent Lee of the Trinity County Sheriff's Department.

Police Officer Robert Davis from the San Antonio Police Department.

SUPPORTING THE GOALS AND IDEALS OF AMERICA SAVES WEEK

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 180) supporting the goals and ideals of the third annual America Saves Week.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 180

Whereas financial security is one of the most important issues for most Americans whether it involves saving enough for their children's college education, saving for an unforeseen emergency, a house, or their retirement;

Whereas personal savings as a percentage of disposable income has been low, reaching a 12-month average of 0.6 percent in 2007 before rebounding to a 12-month average of 1.7 percent in 2008, according to Bureau of Economic Analysis data;

Whereas 43.5 percent of American families reported they did not save in 2007, according to the 2007 Federal Reserve Board's Survey of Consumer Finances, which also found that less than half of the population has a savings account, one month of savings or liquid assets, much less the recommended 6 to 12 months worth of emergency savings they might need for an incident such as unexpected unemployment, a medical crisis, rent or a mortgage payment adjustment enabling them to avoid foreclosure;

Whereas a 2008 Survey by the Employee Benefit Research Institute found that there are "savers" and "spenders" in all income classes and almost all have the ability to build wealth through contributions to a workplace retirement program, building home equity, and other savings;

Whereas older Americans are more likely to live within 200 percent of poverty than any other age group, according to the 2009 Employee Benefit Research Institute's Databook, and more than 60 percent of the current elderly population relies on Social Security for over three-fourths of their annual income according to a 2009 Social Security Administration report on Income of the Elderly over Age 55, 2006, and the average savings of retirees remains at $50,000 according to the Federal Reserve Board's Survey of Consumer Finances for 2007, and the current financial crisis is draining those funds;

Whereas America Saves, managed by the Consumer Federation of America, was established 8 years ago as an annual nationwide campaign that encourages consumers, especially lower-income households, to enroll as American Savers and establish a personal savings goal in an effort to build personal wealth and enhance financial security;

Whereas America Saves now has 53 local, State and national campaigns working with over 500 mainstream financial institutions which provide no-fee or low-fee, low-opening-balance savings accounts that allow small savers to achieve success;

Whereas government and non-government entities at the local, State and national levels organize America Saves campaigns to encourage individuals to open a savings account, participate in workplace retirement programs, and devise a savings plan;

Whereas over 1,000 local, State, and national organizations have motivated more than 145,000 people to enroll as American Savers; and

Whereas establishing automatic and habitual savings is a primary focus for this year's America Saves Week, a theme reflected in the work of the Financial and Economic Literacy Caucus, Federal agencies, non-profits, community-based groups, private sector organizations, and the Employee Benefit Research Institute and its America Savings Education Councils Choose-to-Save Campaign: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) recognizes the importance of savings to financial security;

(2) supports the goals and ideals of "America Saves Week";

(3) acknowledges the tireless efforts of the late Congresswoman Stephanie Tubbs Jones to eliminate predatory lending, increase the nation's savings rate, and improve the overall economic situation of all those residing in the United States; and

(4) requests that the President issue a proclamation calling on the Federal Government, States, localities, schools, nonprofit organizations, businesses, other entities, and the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate programs and activities with the goal of increasing the savings rates for individuals of all ages and walks of life.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HINOJOSA) and the gentlewoman from Illinois (Mrs. BIGGERT) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on this legislation and to insert extraneous material thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

I rise today in strong support of House Resolution 180, supporting the goals and ideals of the third annual America Saves Week, which runs from February 22 to March 1.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to thank Chairman FRANK for his assistance in bringing this important and timely resolution to the House floor.

I also want to express my sincere appreciation for all that my friend, Congresswoman JUDY BIGGERT, has done over the years to help improve the financial literacy rates for all the individuals across the United States at all stages of life. In 2004, she and I co-founded and currently co-chair the Financial Economic Literacy Caucus. Without Congresswoman BIGGERT, I don't think we would have gotten as far as we have promoting financial literacy and, hopefully, making a measurable difference. I must say that we definitely have let the financial literacy genie out of the bottle.

I also want to take this opportunity to thank Congresswoman BIGGERT's staff, Nicole Austin and Zachary Cikanek and all they are doing to help JUDY and me to attain our goal.

Financial literacy is one of the most important issues for most Americans, whether it involves saving enough money for their children's college education, saving for an unforeseen emergency, a house, maybe a car, or their retirement.

The personal savings rate has been low, reaching a 12-month average of 0.6 percent in 2007 before rebounding to a 12-month average of 1.7 percent in 2008. The 2007 Federal Reserve Board's Survey of Consumer Finances found that only 44 percent of American families reported that they did not save in 2007. Furthermore, the survey found that less than half of the population has the following: number 1, a savings account; number 2, a month of savings or liquid assets; and number 3, the Federal Reserve Board's survey also found that those folks residing in the United States don't have 6 to 12 months worth of emergency savings they might need for an incident such as unexpected unemployment, a medical crisis, rent or a mortgage payment adjustment enabling them to avoid foreclosure.

Research has found that there are savers and there are spenders in all income classes, and almost all have the ability to build wealth through contributions to a workplace retirement program, building home equity and other savings.

Older Americans are more likely to live within 200 percent of poverty than any other age group, and more than 60 percent of the current elderly population relies on Social Security for three-fourths of their annual income. What I find even more alarming is that the average savings of retirees remain at $50,000, and the current financial crisis is draining those funds.

To shed light on all these shortcomings, as well as provide ways to address them, America Saves, managed by the Consumer Federation of America, was established 8 years ago as an annual nationwide campaign that encourages consumers, especially lower income households, to enroll as American savers and establish a personal savings goal in an effort to build personal wealth and to enhance financial security. America Saves now has 53 local, State and national campaigns working with over 500 mainstream financial institutions like banks, which provide no-fee or low-fee or low-opening-balance savings accounts that allow small savers to achieve success.

Government and non-government entities at the local, State and national levels organize America Saves campaigns to encourage individuals to open savings accounts, to participate in workplace retirement programs, and devise a savings plan. As a result of America Saves, over 1,000 local, State and national organizations have motivated more than 145,000 people to enroll as American savers.

The primary focus of this year's America Saves Week is establishing an automatic and habitual savings, a theme reflected in the work of the Financial and Economic Literacy Caucus, Federal agencies, non-profits, community-based groups, private sector organizations and the Employee Benefit Research Institutes and its America Savings Educational Council's Choose to Save Campaign. I personally have a 5 percent deduction made from my payroll check and have it placed into my savings account in the Federal Thrift Savings Program.

I want to acknowledge the tireless efforts of the late Congresswoman Stephanie Tubbs Jones to eliminate predatory lending, increase the Nation's savings rate, and to improve the overall economic situation of all those residing in the United States. I respected her personally, and want all those listening today, and for all those who will read today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD far into the future, to know how much we respected her, that we miss her and honor her today for her relentless dedication to protecting consumers at a very difficult time. Through her efforts and hopefully, now those of the Financial and Economic Literacy Caucus, Congresswoman BIGGERT and I co-founded and now co-chair, we hope to protect our constituents and encourage savings.

I am very pleased that Federal agencies, States, localities, schools, nonprofit organizations, businesses, other entities and the people of the United States are observing the third annual America Saves Week with a goal of increasing the savings rates for individuals of all ages and of all walks of life.

I strongly encourage my colleagues to support this important resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today as the lead Republican cosponsor of the America Saves Week resolution, and urge my colleagues to support it.

I'd like to thank my good friend and fellow Chair of the House Financial and Economic Literacy Caucus, Congressman HINOJOSA, for sponsoring this important resolution and for all the work that he has done on financial literacy.

In addition, I'd like to join Congressman HINOJOSA in honoring and thanking the late Congresswoman Stephanie Tubbs Jones, who previously sponsored the resolution in the House and was a strong advocate for financial literacy throughout her career. She was a dear friend and will be remembered always.

Mr. Speaker, in our current economic climate, the need to improve the financial literacy and the financial security of Americans is greater than ever. Now more than ever, it is clear that promoting savings is critical to ensuring that families have the economic buffer they need to weather periods of economic hardship. And efforts to stimulate the economy cannot succeed unless we equip Americans with the knowledge and resources they need to thrive in today's sophisticated market.

This resolution emphasizes the importance of savings and achieving financial security. Less than half the population has a savings account, 1 month of savings or liquid assets, let alone the recommended 6 to 12 months of savings to have on hand in case of unforeseen events such as a medical issue or job loss. There are no rainy day things that people have today.

In conjunction with America Saves Week, this resolution encourages Americans to plan ahead for such unexpected events and grow wealth, not debt. Controlling expenses and increasing savings each month will prove to be invaluable in improving the financial security of Americans.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support this resolution and encourage savings during America Saves Week and throughout the year.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HINOJOSA. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield 4 minutes to my colleague from Texas (Mr. CULBERSON).

Mr. CULBERSON. I thank my colleague.

I have enjoyed working with my good friend, Congressman HINOJOSA. We in the Texas delegation, I know, Mr. HINOJOSA knows, we work more closely together, I think, than almost any delegation in the country and take a great deal of pride in being Texans.

I thank my colleague for his earnest and sincere resolution which he presents to the Congress today in an effort to encourage individual Americans to increase their savings. My good friend JUDY BIGGERT has coauthored this, and it is a noble and worthwhile resolution.

However, as we, the Congress, adopt this resolution that designates this week as America Saves Week, I think it's important to point out, Mr. Speaker, the incredible and dramatic contrast between the goal we are setting here today for individual Americans and the complete opposite direction that the leadership of this Congress and the President pointed out last night.

I am reminded that Will Rogers often said he didn't tell jokes; he just reported on what Congress did. Today, Congress is asking the American people to save money; yet this new liberal majority in Congress has spent more money in less time than has any Congress in history. Today is the 20th legislative day we've been in session, and counting the $400 billion appropriations bill on the floor today, we have already spent about $1.3 trillion—all of it debt. The United States Congress is paying our mortgage with a credit card; yet we're passing a resolution to encourage America to save money. This is absurd.

We have today the new governing majority in Congress, the new President. This new direction he has taken us in is off a financial cliff. Yet we're telling Americans to save more money? Every nickel we spend today this Congress is putting on our children's credit card. We are literally, Mr. Speaker, paying America's mortgage with a credit card. It is unaffordable and unsustainable. Last night, the President laid out all of the new spending programs piled on top of this. It really does remind me of what Will Rogers said, that he didn't tell jokes; he just reported on what Congress did. This is a wonderful goal for not only individual Americans but for the United States Congress.

How about let us really have the United States Congress follow some of the guidelines in this resolution. Let us make sure that we in Congress are not spending more than we bring in, as we tell individual Americans to do. Let us make sure that we in Congress have enough of a cushion, as the resolution tells individual Americans, so that we can be ready and that we want individual Americans to be ready "for an incident such as an unexpected crisis."

Are we ready for an earthquake in California, America? Are we ready for another hurricane? What about a terrorist attack? What financial cushion does America have to pay for the cost of another 9/11 when this Congress has driven America deeper into debt than any Congress in the history of the United States? Never before have so few spent so much money in so little time with so little regard for the financial security of future generations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mrs. BIGGERT. I yield the gentleman an additional 30 seconds.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to remember that Americans have always taken pride in the fact that we, current generations, have always sacrificed today so that our children would live a better life.

It is important, I think, for the Congress, for this liberal majority and for this new President to take my good friend Mr. HINOJOSA's and Mrs. BIGGERT's resolution to heart. Let us quit spending money we don't have. Let this Congress quit living beyond its means, and let it truly secure the financial safety and security of future generations by cutting spending and cutting taxes to get this economy back on track. Walk away from these massive new expansions of entitlements. We've already spent $1.3 trillion in the first 20 days. We've almost doubled the annual budget of the United States in one stroke.

Mr. HINOJOSA, Mrs. BIGGERT, thank you for bringing this resolution to Congress. Let us make sure that Congress saves.

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised to hear the thoughts and ideas of my friend from Texas, and I am of the total opposite belief.

I say that saving at this time is the right thing for America, and that is why we saw such an increase in savings in 2008, because the American public has lost confidence, has lost hope in what happened to the stock market in 2008. So I say that Americans are correct in saving their money in ways that they know how and that they follow the ideas that this organization that Mrs. BIGGERT and I have been championing, because it is the right thing to do. I urge all Members of this Congress to vote in favor of this resolution.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, before I close, I would also like to thank Greg Davis of Mr. HINOJOSA's staff and Andrea Pivarundas from my staff, as well as Nicole Austin, for their work on this resolution. I would also like to thank Dallas Salisbury of EBRI and all of the other individuals and groups promoting savings in America. Particularly, I would like to thank Chairman HINOJOSA for all the work that he has done on this issue. I have enjoyed working with him. Thank you.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HINOJOSA) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 180.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (during the vote). There are 2 minutes remaining in this vote.

□ 1134

So (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 1105, OMNIBUS APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2009

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 184 and ask for its immediate consideration.

H. RES. 184

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider in the House the bill (H.R. 1105) making omnibus appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2009, and for other purposes. All points of order against consideration of the bill are waived except those arising under clause 9 or 10 of rule XXI. The amendment printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution shall be considered as adopted. The bill, as amended, shall be considered as read. All points of order against the bill, as amended, are waived. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill, as amended, to final passage without intervening motion except: (1) one hour of debate equally divided and controlled by the chair and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations; and (2) one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

SEC. 2. House Resolution 158 is laid on the table.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order against H. Res. 184 because the resolution violates section 426(a) of the Congressional Budget Act. The resolution contains a waiver of all points of order against consideration of the conference report, which includes a waiver of section 425 of the Congressional Budget Act, which causes the violation of section 426(a).

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WEINER). The gentleman from Arizona makes a point of order that the resolution violates section 426(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

The gentleman has met the threshold burden to identify the specific language in the resolution on which the point of order is predicated. Such a point of order shall be disposed of by the question of consideration.

The gentleman from Arizona and a Member opposed, the gentleman from Massachusetts, each will control 10 minutes of debate on the question of consideration.

After that debate the Chair will put the question of consideration, to wit: Will the House now consider the resolution?

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, this point of order is against the bill because it may contain unfunded mandates. We have in this body a question of consideration where we shouldn't move ahead with a bill if it might contain unfunded mandates.

Mr. Speaker, the point I want to make is we have no idea whether this contains unfunded mandates or not. I can't tell you definitively if it does, and here's why:

This is the bill. This is the bill that we received less than 48 hours ago. It contains, for example, roughly 9,000 earmarks. Now, somebody please correct me if I'm wrong, but I don't believe in my time here—it's getting heavy. I'll put it down. In my time here in 8 years I don't think I have ever seen a bill, and I know that it didn't happen prior to my time here, where one single bill has contained this many earmarks, 9,000. And let me point out this is a combination of nine bills, only three of which went even through the Committee on Appropriations. The rest of them didn't even go through the full committee, just the subcommittee. We didn't have the ability to go to the floor and challenge any of these. That just wasn't available to us.

So here we are today with this stack that we just got less than 48 hours ago and we are told that we have to pile through and try to see if these 9,000 earmarks, which is part of a spending bill that spends $410 billion, to see if they're valid, to see if there is a Federal nexus, to see if there might be anything untoward. We don't know. None of us can actually go through that, and so we shouldn't proceed with consideration of this bill.

One way to look at it is that there are 9,000 earmarks in the bill. The way that we should look at it as well, and I don't know how many, nobody can tell me how many, but it's a safe bet to assume there are a few thousand, at least, no-bid contracts. These are earmarks that go to private companies that nobody else has a chance to bid on.

Now, one of the best lines I felt that the President used last night, and it was one of the greatest applause lines that we had and justifiably so, the President said we have had no-bid defense contracts with regard to Iraq, and we shouldn't. And the whole place erupted in applause. I myself stood up. We shouldn't do that. Yet in this piece of legislation, we have at least a few thousand no-bid contracts. No-bid contracts that are going to private companies whose executives and the lobbyists who represent them have contributed millions of dollars to Members in this body, the same Members who have requested those earmarks.

Now, one need not suggest that there is anything untoward in any of them only to suggest that somebody on the outside certainly thinks there is. There is one group, the PMA group, who makes a habit of requesting a lot of earmarks in bills. In fact, in the 2008 defense bill, they got $300 million in earmarks for their clients from this body. That same lobbying firm has clients receiving a dozen or so earmarks in this bill. These are earmarks to private companies. These are no-bid contracts that we are doing that we all stand up and applaud when the President says we shouldn't have no-bid contracts going to private companies, and yet in this piece of legislation we are going to consider today, unless we stop consideration, we're going to be approving thousands of no-bid contracts to private companies.

Now, can anybody in this body stand to tell me that that is right and proper? Are we upholding the dignity of the House and the decorum of the House by doing so? We know that there is an investigation going on right now of one of those firms that sought earmarks and received earmarks in this bill. A lobbying firm received several for their clients. Yet they remain in this piece of legislation.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues on the other side of the aisle are using this procedural maneuver to try to prevent consideration of an important piece of legislation.

Technically, the point of order is about whether or not to consider this rule and ultimately the underlying bill. But we all know that it's really about trying to block this bill without any opportunity for debate and without any opportunity for an up-or-down vote on the merits of the legislation itself.

I oppose any effort to shut down debate in consideration of this bill, and I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" so we can consider this important piece of legislation on its merits and not kill it on a procedural motion.

The underlying bill we are talking about represents the compilation of nine appropriations bills from last year. There is important funding in here for health care, for education, for transportation, to help move our economy forward. Those who oppose the bill can vote against it on final passage, but we must consider this rule, and we must pass this legislation today.

Mr. Speaker, I have the right to close, but, in the end, I will urge my colleagues to vote "yes" to consider the rule, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FLAKE. May I inquire as to the time remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arizona has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. FLAKE. The gentleman makes a point that we should discuss the merits of the bill. This point of order is raised against continuing because we don't know if there are unfunded mandates in the bill.

Again, I will yield to the gentleman if he can assure me that there are no unfunded mandates in this bill, if he can say that he has read this piece of legislation or that he knows that there are none, because I think that it's incumbent upon us.

I will yield to the gentleman if he can make that assurance.

Mr. MCGOVERN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I will say to the gentleman, as far as I know, there are no unfunded mandates in this bill.

Mr. FLAKE. Thank you. As far as I know, there might be, there may not be.

But I can tell you, when you have a bill this large that we got just 48 hours ago, we simply don't know.

Typically, several years ago, we were having problems, we had Members of this body who were indicted and were convicted and are now in jail for earmark abuse. We said at that time that we should have reform, we should have transparency. We got some transparency, and that's great, and I applaud the other side of the aisle for doing what they did to bring this about.

Transparency, sunlight always illuminates, but doesn't always disinfect, contrary to popular belief. You have to follow up transparency with something else.

Some may say we have a transparent process now because we got copies of 9,000 earmarks 48 hours in advance of considering the legislation, but I don't have the ability, nor does any Member of this body, to actually challenge any of the 9,000 earmarks contained in this legislation.

Typically, appropriation bills come to the floor under an open rule, which allows Members of Congress to challenge specific earmarks. Are there one of these no-bid contracts, for example, that was lobbied for by the PMA group, a group that is now under Federal investigation that has since imploded just days after it was revealed they were under investigation?

Are some of these earmarks, perhaps, untoward? Many people would actually like to challenge that, have the author, have the one who secured the earmark come to the floor and defend that earmark: "Here is why this company deserves a no-bid contract. Here is why I know, as a Member of Congress, that nobody else can provide the services that they can provide, and they deserve a no-bid contract. Here is why." We aren't allowed to do that, because this legislation is coming to the floor under a closed rule and no amendments like that are even offered. I can't challenge any earmarks in this legislation, nor can anybody in this body. It's one vote for the whole package.

We are better than that. The people who sent us here deserve better than that. This great institution deserves better than that. Let's not proceed with consideration of this legislation.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FLAKE. May I inquire as to the time remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, later today we will be considering a privileged resolution that is brought to the floor to ask the Ethics Committee to investigate the relationship between earmarks and campaign contributions.

We know, as I mentioned, that the Department of Justice is currently conducting that kind of investigation. Politico reported just a few days ago that several sources have said that the Department of Justice has been building a case based on earmarks and campaign contributions or investigating earmarks and campaign contributions.

Yet our own Ethics Committee guidelines state that earmarks that are received from those who we get a no-bid contract for are proper and not a problem.

My fear is that our own Ethics Committee here in the House has a different standard, a more lax standard than, perhaps, the Department of Justice has. And Members of Congress, who are securing earmarks or no-bid contracts for private companies, might be exposed more than they think they are.

And even if they aren't, upholding the dignity and decorum of this body dictates that we do something more here, that we actually have a process that is above reproach. And when you have investigations swirling out there over lobby firms and others, we aren't upholding the decorum and dignity of this body.

This resolution that we will consider later today is not a partisan resolution. No Member is mentioned. No party is mentioned. And before you vote to table this resolution, to kill it, please consider, don't we deserve better here?

Shouldn't we have a standard that's higher than indictment and conviction?

Don't the people who sent us here deserve a little better than that?

With that, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 9 minutes remaining.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on this motion so we can consider the underlying bill, which is a compilation of nine appropriations bills, which really represents kind of a completion of last year's work. There is money in here for important transportation projects, for health care projects, for education projects, all very important to get our economy moving again.

I would also say that the earmark process has been much improved since the Democrats took control of the Congress. There is more transparency, as the gentleman conceded, and I think there is more scrutiny given to individual earmarks.

But let me just say one other thing. I believe in the integrity, in the character of every single person that serves in this Congress, and I believe the people, Republicans and Democrats, do the best they can for their constituents. And I really take exception when the character of individuals in this Congress is brought into question and somehow a vague allegation is out there that there is something sinister going on.

The bottom line is that the vast majority of these earmarks go to things like emergency rooms at hospitals, go to bridges to help rebuild infrastructure, go to help schools and to help kids get an education.

I would say to the gentleman if he is uncomfortable with this process, that he should know that 40 percent of the earmarks that are in these underlying bills are Republican earmarks. And so that old saying, "Physician, heal thyself," I would suggest that he bring this up to members of his own conference.

But I believe that these bills represent the hard work of Republicans and Democrats. There are good things in these bills. We need to move forward on this. We can't delay. If we delay, I think it will have a negative impact on our economy.

So I want to urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on this motion to consider so we can debate and pass this important piece of legislation today.

I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time for debate has expired.

The question is, Will the House now consider the resolution?

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 234, nays 177, not voting 20, as follows:

Messrs. CALVERT, McHENRY and SMITH of New Jersey changed their vote from “yea” to “nay.”

Mr. HELLER changed his vote from “nay” to “yea.”

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Ms. SCHWARTZ. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 83, had I been present, I would have voted “yea.”

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS). All time yielded during consideration of the rule is for debate only. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. McGOVERN. I also ask unanimous consent that all Members be given 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on House Resolution 184.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, H. Res. 184 provides for the consideration of H.R. 1105, the Omnibus Appropriations Act of 2009. The rule provides 1 hour of debate controlled by the Committee on Appropriations, and one motion to recommit with or without instructions. The rule also self-executes an amendment that blocks the automatic cost-of-living adjustment due to be provided to Members of Congress in 2010.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this rule and in support of the Fiscal Year 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, represents the completion of last year's work. We are in this position today for one principal reason, George W. Bush failed to provide budgets that reflected the real needs of the American people. And his philosophy was essentially “my way or the highway.”

If he had gotten his way last year, he would have cut energy efficiency, renewable energy and weatherization programs. He would have cut education by eliminating vocational education programs, slashing higher education programs, and cutting programs to help teachers and improve technology. He would have cut healthcare access programs, even as the number of uninsured Americans grew. He would have frozen biomedical research funding and cut the Centers for Disease Control. And he would have cut State and local law enforcement grants and job training, employment services and worker protections curing this economic crisis.

So today, our job is to fix things, to clean up the mess of the last administration, and to help the American people.

Last night, President Obama gave an incredible speech, and he promised to do things differently. He promised an honest accounting of our Nation's needs. That may not seem revolutionary, but it's a big and positive change from the past 8 years.

For the first time, the costs of the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan will actually be included in the budget. The costs won't be covered up or hidden. No more gimmicks. The American people will know the real costs of these wars.

We will anticipate and budget for Federal dollars in response to national disasters like hurricanes, tornadoes, floods and earthquakes.

And President Obama, last night, pledged to cut the deficit in half by the year 2012, a promise to bring back fiscal responsibility. In short, there will be more truth-telling.

Mr. Speaker, we need to move forward, and I believe that we will. But first we need to dispense with last year's business.

Some of my friends on the other side complain that we shouldn't pass this omnibus bill today because it's too expensive. They complain that it will add to the deficit. It's interesting to hear my friends on the other side of the aisle worry out loud about the deficit. Where have they been for the last 8 years?

Facts are a stubborn thing, Mr. Speaker, and the facts speak for themselves. We are facing the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression, and we have the biggest debt in the history of the United States of America. This is something we inherited from my friends on the other side of the aisle. So it is somewhat ironic that the very people who drove this economy into a ditch are now complaining about the size of the tow truck.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we need to do whatever possible to get this economy back on track and to help the American people. The policies of the past, the same old same old, they failed. I believe this President has the political will to do the right thing. I believe he will get the economy back on track and he will get our fiscal house in order. And I believe that this Congress will support him.

What is before us, to put it simply, is help for States, cities and towns and for average people. There's an increase over current levels of appropriations. This, combined with the Recovery and Reinvestment Act, provides a lot of help to a lot of people.

This is not the bill, Mr. Speaker, that I would have written if it were solely up to me, and I don't believe it is the bill that Chairman OBEY would have written if it was solely up to him. This bill reflects bipartisan negotiations and bipartisan compromises.

I want to see more money in this bill, Mr. Speaker, for roads and bridges, more money for international food aid and anti-hunger programs like the McGovern-Dole Program and Food for Peace, and more money to combat climate change. I want to see Pell Grants fully funded, and I want to make sure that all eligible children receive a meal during the summer months if they receive a meal during the school year.

But I'm glad that we have reversed the Bush cuts on domestic priorities. I'm proud of the increased funding for WIC in this bill, funding that will help low-income pregnant mothers and newborns receive the healthy food that they need. And I'm pleased that this bill provides a 19 percent increase for the Food and Drug Administration, funding that will be used for critical oversight of our Nation's food supply so we don't have any more contamination scares like the recent peanut contamination cases that we've recently seen.

This bill also increases funding for the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act by providing $558 million above 2008 for a total of $11.5 billion. And this bill provides $550 million for the COPS program, a program critical to the safety of our cities and towns.

Mr. Speaker, we need to get this bill completed. We need to finish the job left over from the last Congress and turn the page, once and for all, on the last 8 years. I urge my colleagues to support this rule and the bill.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I stand in strong opposition to this closed rule. And Mr. Speaker, let me say this, that the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN), my colleague and friend, has had a chance to sit here and blame George Bush for what was entirely this body's responsibility. I think that's an awkward position for anybody to be in, to blame the President of the United States for what we have done or what we will do.

The gentleman from Massachusetts quite plainly said that George Bush and Republicans tried to hide the real costs of the war and did not put it in fiscal terms to where it came out for the budget where we would all understand it and tried to hide it. Well, let me just say this, that we just passed an $800 billion plus emergency spending bill that did exactly the same thing that he was saying George Bush did, Republicans did, about not being honest about what the real facts of the case are, hiding the budget money.

Mr. Speaker, the bottom line is that we're here today to debate a bill that was ready to go last June, and people are blaming George Bush for our inability to get that on the floor. And I think that that's just not true.

The bottom line is that this body decided, through the Democrat leadership, that they didn't want to move the bill forward because there was an election. And if there had been an election where tens of billions, hundreds of billions of dollars more would be passed by this Congress, then the American people would have seen that. Instead, they waited until after the election.

So I rise today in strong opposition to this completely closed rule, and to the ill-conceived underlying legislation. Week after week my friends on the other side of the aisle continue to bulldoze their massive spending bills on the floor of the House of Representatives, with no Republican input and no regular order, in this Congress.

This is the third time in a little over a month that I've managed a rule in this 111th Congress where my Democratic colleagues have had no hearings, no markups and allowed no amendments by Republicans. Senator HARRY REID yesterday was quoted as saying that he is going to allow Republicans and Democrats to offer amendments in the Senate. So why won't Speaker PELOSI allow Members of this House the same privilege?

In an effort to encourage the Democratic leadership to uphold their promise to the American people of being the most open, honest and ethical Congress, I think, and our Republican leadership believes, that we should hold hearings and be held accountable for what we do, including Republican feedback and amendments. In a letter dated the 5th of this month, Speaker PELOSI and Majority Leader HOYER were asked if they would immediately post the text of the omnibus and all of the earmark and spending projects included. Yet, once again, our friends, the Democrats, have posted the text of this massive spending bill, which holds nine of the remaining 12 appropriations bills, only a day and a half before the vote. And yet our letter states that "in the midst of a severe recession, taxpayers should have a right to read and see each provision of this legislation." Taxpayers elected each and every one of us. We should be able to "evaluate the merit of each dollar of government spending that their children and grandchildren will be required to fund." I think Americans deserve better.

Last week I had the opportunity, when I was back home for the break, to speak to many constituents back in Texas, and they are growing increasingly upset and concerned with the amount of massive spending that this Democratic majority is pursuing. Last week President Obama signed a $792 billion stimulus package into law that consisted of over $500 billion in new spending. This week, my friends and our colleagues, the Democrats, are at it again. Now we're discussing a $410 billion omnibus for a fiscal year that we're almost halfway through.

The legislation we're discussing today is actually an increase of 8.3 percent over the 2008 fiscal year funding, which is more than $32 billion. The omnibus appropriations bill contains funding for many of the same agencies and programs that just received funds in the stimulus bill.

Therefore, to uncover the true level of spending for these programs this year, the funding levels of both bills should and must be combined. The combined FY 2009 funding for agencies, including the omnibus and the stimulus, is $680 billion—$301 billion more than these programs received in 2008—for a combined 80 percent spending increase this year, an 80 percent increase in spending this year alone.

Mr. Speaker, this week, the President held a fiscal responsibility summit that was attended by Republicans and Democrats. How can the President take my Democrat colleagues seriously when they spend another $410 billion after the $792 billion stimulus? There is nothing fiscally responsible regarding designating $1.2 trillion in spending in just 2 weeks.

American families and small businesses are making sacrifices across this country and are cutting expenses due to tough economic times. Yet this Democratic majority continues to spend like there is no problem at all. Worse yet, we are taking a bill that was completely marked up last year and are assuming that those same needs are needed now.

Republicans welcome President Obama's call for fiscal responsibility, and we are willing to make the hard choices necessary to bring fiscal responsibility to Washington. Republican leadership has called for a spending freeze, and in a letter to Speaker PELOSI and Majority Leader HOYER, this past Monday, we did exactly that.

At a time of deficits, a freeze would allow the Federal Government to continue functioning at current levels, just like we have been doing for the past 6 months, while showing the commitment to the American people that we, as Members of Congress, are taking this crisis very seriously.

Mr. Speaker, this Congress must do better than this to prevent the enormous growth of Federal spending from encroaching on the family budgets of Americans. I oppose this rule and the underlying legislation as it is currently drafted.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, February 5, 2009.

Hon. NANCY PELOSI,
Speaker of the House, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC.

Hon. STENY HOYER,
Majority Leader, House of Representatives, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC.

MADAM SPEAKER AND MAJORITY LEADER HOYER: Many weeks ago, you scheduled this week to consider the Fiscal Year 2009 omnibus spending bill. Now that you have announced that consideration will be delayed until after the President's Day recess, we remain troubled that the text of the bill has not been made available to the public and are concerned about the apparent precedent being established with massive spending bills in the 111th Congress. We urge you to make the text of the bill and explanatory statement available to all by posting it on-line and heeding President Obama's call for more transparency in government.

In the face of the highest deficit in our Nation's history, the Majority has asked the American taxpayers to fund nearly $1.5 trillion in new government spending in just four short weeks. And yet now the Majority plans to spend hundreds of billions more without yet sharing the content of the bill with Republican Members or the public. In the midst of a severe recession, taxpayers have a right to see each provision of this legislation and evaluate the merit of each dollar of government spending their children and grandchildren are being required to fund.

Recent experience has demonstrated that transparency, scrutiny, and regular order are essential tools for crafting effective and prudent legislation. Vast spending bills that have been rushed through the House, such as the so-called "stimulus," were hastily considered without adequate input from both sides of the aisle—and the American taxpayer is worse off for it.

Without regular order and sufficient time to examine this legislation how can the American people and Members of Congress know where the $500 billion will be spent? What will the funding increases be for the final six months of fiscal year 2009? Sadly, if the Majority refuses to release at least the text of the omnibus, none of these questions will be answered before the House votes to add hundreds of billions more to the deficit.

Again, we urge you to make the text of the omnibus spending bill and explanatory statement available to the public immediately, allowing all sides to judge the merit of each taxpayer dollar spent.

Sincerely,

Representatives John Boehner; Mike Pence; Cathy McMorris Rodgers; Pete Sessions; David Dreier; Eric Cantor; Thaddeus McCotter; John Carter; Roy Blunt; Kevin McCarthy.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, February 23, 2009.

Hon. NANCY PELOSI,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

Hon. STENY HOYER,
Majority Leader, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

MADAM SPEAKER AND MAJORITY LEADER HOYER: Last week the House rushed through passage of a 1,073-page spending bill with a total price tag of well over $1 trillion. Many of the details of that legislation are still being revealed to the public, given that no one had sufficient opportunity to read the final bill before it was brought to the floor.

Reports now indicate that this week the House will consider a $410 billion omnibus spending bill to increase government spending levels for the rest of Fiscal Year 2009. Once again, Republicans have not seen this bill, and the American people deserve to know how their tax dollars will be spent.

Rather than hastily forcing another massive, partisan spending bill through the House, we urge the Majority to allow the House to consider a spending freeze.

At a time of record deficits, a freeze would allow the federal government to keep functioning at current spending levels without requiring beleaguered taxpayers to pay for new spending increases. Congress could ensure that essential government functions are carried out without any cuts while still protecting taxpayers from spending increases during a time of economic hardship. Our nation now faces the highest deficit in its history, and we are plunging further into uncharted territory with the anticipated debt nearly doubling previous record levels as a percentage of GDP.

In light of welcomed press statements from Democrat leadership expressing the need for fiscal restraint, we are confident that you will agree with the merits of freezing rather than increasing discretionary spending at this time.

Sincerely,

JOHN BOEHNER,
Republican Leader.

MIKE PENCE,
Conference Chairman.

ERIC CANTOR,
Republican Whip.

THADDEUS MCCOTTER,
Conference Chairman.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

My colleagues on the other side of the aisle want to defend George W. Bush's economic policies of the last 8 years. They can have at it. I think the American people want a change. That's what they voted for in this election. I would just like to show my colleagues:

This is a chart entitled "Record Deterioration" on the budgets under Republican administrations. You'll see that we get deeper into deficit spending under George Bush 1. Then the blue line represents Bill Clinton when, actually, we went into surplus. Then this red line that kind of goes after the charts represents the policies of George W. Bush. We are in a mess because of the reckless policies of the last 8 years, and we need to dig ourselves out of it.

I would also say to my friend that he says that there is no Republican input on this bill at all. Yet, as far as I can tell, he has seven earmarks in this bill. The gentleman from Florida, who is sitting next to him, has 24 earmarks. Forty percent of the earmarks in this bill is the Republicans'. How did they magically show up in this bill? The bottom line is there has been bipartisan cooperation and collaboration and negotiation on this bill, and we need to get this bill done because we need to move on.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado, a distinguished member of the Rules Committee (Mr. POLIS).

Mr. POLIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Act. I thank Chairman OBEY and his staff for their hard work and leadership on this legislation.

This bill funds essential education, health care and renewable energy programs which, especially in these tough economic times, we cannot afford to let fall behind. In addition, by reducing funding for ineffective initiatives, this bill promotes efficiency and echoes President Obama's call for fiscal responsibility last night.

Many districts and States across the Nation will benefit greatly from this legislation. My district in Colorado is an excellent example. We are home to a significant science and technology presence—the Space Science Institute, Sun Microsystems, the Nation's first Smart Grid City of Boulder, Colorado, NOAA, NCAR, and NIST. This bill provides $394 million for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration for climate research and $819 million for the National Institute of Standards and Technology to promote American scientific competitiveness.

This bill will provide the resources to sustain important educational programs for America's young people. It increases funding to each of the four Head Start programs in my district, helping Colorado's low-income kids achieve a competitive edge in their future learning, access to financial aid and Pell Grants, making college increasingly important in this competitive economy more affordable.

It also provides a much needed boost in the funding to support community health centers, which provide insured and uninsured Coloradans access to preventative and emergency health care.

This bill increases funding for public lands such as the Rocky Mountain National Park and the Arapaho National Forest in Colorado that have been neglected for far too long.

It provides the resources necessary for the Environmental Protection Agency's efforts to clean our air and water, and it funds important programs that address climate change and energy independence with substantial money invested in community programs and awareness.

I didn't come to Congress to place blame for our problems or to bicker about partisan solutions. I came to Washington to be part of the solution and to create opportunity. If we want to protect the American dream for our communities and stabilize our economy, we need to support our core programs and services upon which we all rely. This bill is another important step in the right direction.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, at this time, I would like to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Miami and from the Rules Committee (Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART).

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise to engage Chairwoman LOWEY of the State, Foreign Operations, and Related Programs Appropriations Subcommittee in a colloquy.

Madam Chairwoman, President Bush's fiscal year 2009 budget directs $20 million for Cuba under the Economic Support Fund. This funding is critical U.S. assistance to those working for democracy and independent civil society in Cuba. The House voted overwhelmingly to increase funding for this important program in fiscal year 2008. However, funding for Cuba was not specifically designated in the report attached to the omnibus appropriations bill.

Can you clarify for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that it is the intent of the committee and of this Congress to provide $20 million in the underlying legislation for this important program?

I yield to the chairwoman.

Mrs. LOWEY. I want to thank Mr. DIAZ-BALART, Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ and Mr. SIRES for their leadership and interest in promoting democratic governance in Cuba.

While the omnibus does not list funding levels for all programs requested by the administration, funding is assumed at the administration's request unless otherwise noted in the bill and the statement.

I share the Member's concern of the lack of political freedom in Cuba, and want to assure them it is the intent of this committee to provide $20 million in the underlying legislation for this important program as requested in the President's budget submission.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Reclaiming my time, I wish to thank the distinguished chairwoman and her staff for working with Representatives DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ, ALBIO SIRES, MARIO DIAZ-BALART, ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN, and myself.

It is vital that this important program receives $20 million to fully implement activities that range from democratic activism to humanitarian assistance that directly support the Cuban people, not the dictatorship, with the chairwoman's assurance of this full funding.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee (Mr. OBEY).

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I detest the word "blame," and I don't want to use it in these circumstances. I don't want to say that we're here today because I blame President Bush for our differences on these bills. I would prefer to put it another way:

The President simply proposed budgets for the domestic appropriations which would have cut the Job Corps by $50 million. It would have eliminated the employment service by $103 million. It would have eliminated senior jobs programs. It would have eliminated vocational education. It would have eliminated Perkins, SEOG and LEAP student aid programs. It would have funded highway infrastructure $800 million below the level guaranteed in the authorization bill. It would have cut airport modernization grants by 22 percent. It would have eliminated the Community Service Block Grant Program. It would have cut health care access programs by $1 billion. It would have cut low-income heating assistance by $570 million.

Outside of that, it was a terrific budget. So we simply had a stark disagreement with the White House. We simply had a difference of opinion.

The President said he would not sign these domestic bills unless we accepted his level of cuts. We said, "Sorry, but that's not the way the budget process works. We're supposed to be able to proceed, and so long as we confine the spending to the amount limited in the budget resolution, we're supposed to be able to proceed. That amount was some $20 billion at variance from President Bush's budget." So we offered to the White House to at least split the difference. We offered to sit down and to negotiate and to split the difference right down the middle. The White House declined. So we said, okay, if that's the case, we're simply going to wait, take our chances on the election and hope that we elect somebody to the White House who will negotiate like an adult. Now that is what has happened.

So we bring this bill here today. It essentially does two things: It provides the base funding for programs that are funded in the recovery act, without which the additional recovery funding could not succeed. Example, of the operating budget for the Social Security Administration. Example, the other half of the 50 percent that we need to keep our promises on Pell Grants. Example, the $40 billion we need to keep our commitments on highway construction.

The omnibus also funds numerous critical programs not funded in the recovery act. We only touched about 20 to 25 percent of government accounts in providing funding in the recovery act. The other 75 percent of government did not receive any additional funds in that recovery act, and so we simply provided those funds in this bill. That is what we are doing.

With respect to earmarks, I would simply say that the process that we're following today is far more transparent than it was in the so-called "good old days." In the "good old days," subcommittee Chairs would come to the floor. They would pretend that there were not earmarks in these bills, and then they would call up the agency and say, "Hey, boys. I want you to do A, B, C, D, E, and F," and they would do A, B, C, D, E, and F totally hidden from public view.

Instead, today, you may not like the fact that Congress participates on an equal constitutional footing, but the fact is, under the process today, every single earmark that is out there has to be identified by name. It is on the Web, and people can examine them to see whether they think they're deserving or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MCGOVERN. I yield to the gentleman an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. OBEY. Now, from a standpoint of personal convenience, as chairman of the committee, I would much prefer that there would not be earmarks because then I wouldn't have to spend so much time in a hassle about them, but the fact is they represent the hole in the donut. Earmarks today are less than 1 percent of all of the funds in this bill. As a percentage of Federal spending, we have cut earmarks in half in this bill. I think that's doing pretty well. There are some people in this place who think that because Duke Cunningham fouled the nest with his corrupt practices that somehow we should eliminate all earmarks. With all due respect, that's like saying, because somebody gets drunk behind the wheel of a car, you ought to abolish the automobile.

The fact is, without the earmarking process, the White House and its anonymous bureaucrats would make every single spending decision in government. So, if you're a well-connected corporation and you've got some buddies in the Pentagon, you can sit down on the inside and work out sweetheart deals, and nobody will ever be the wiser. Earmarking may have its problems like any other human endeavor, but at least it's out in the open. You can measure it. There is a degree of accountability that never existed before we proceeded with these reforms. I am proud of those reforms, and every Member of this body who voted for them on both sides of the aisle should be proud, too.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, at this time, I would like to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman, the ranking member of Natural Resources, the gentleman from Pasco, Washington (Mr. HASTINGS).

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I oppose this totally closed rule. As the ranking Republican on the House Natural Resources Committee, I especially object to a very dangerous policy rider that could seriously threaten new job creation and economic growth across our entire country.

Section 429 of this bill allows the Secretary of the Interior to withdraw, with no public notice and no public comment, two rules established during the Bush administration that ensure the listing of the polar bear as threatened under the Endangered Species Act is not transformed into a vast new expansion of government power to impose greenhouse gas emission regulations on economic activity across America.

Section 429 empowers the Interior Department or a Federal judge to limit potentially any carbon dioxide or other greenhouse gas emission in all 50 States using the polar bear and the Endangered Species Act as a regulatory vehicle.

We all want to protect the polar bear. As the Washington Post editorialized last year, "Though the polar bear deserves protection, the Endangered Species Act is not the means, and the Fish and Wildlife Service is not the agency to arrest global warming."

By wiping out this rule under 429, any increase in carbon dioxide or greenhouse gas emission would be subject to a potential lawsuit on the grounds that the action must first require consultation with the Fish and Wildlife Service to mitigate emissions.

What emits greenhouse gases? I will name a few examples, Mr. Speaker. It's building a new factory in Pennsylvania or a new school on an Indian reservation, it's farming and cattle ranching. Most all of the shovel-ready projects on the trillion-dollar stimulus bill would, in fact, be at risk.

Democrats know section 429 is extremely controversial so they slipped this into this massive spending bill behind closed doors. Mr. Speaker, why the secrecy? The reason is obvious. Section 429 threatens the creation of new jobs in every State and can do real harm to our already troubled economy. This is a backdoor maneuver to warp the original purpose and intent of the Endangered Species Act to invent vast new climate change powers for the Federal Government to control economic activities.

Democrats claim section 429 is just an attempt to stop midnight rules completed at the end of the Bush administration. Yet, Mr. Speaker, these rules in the Bush administration were written in full compliance with the law. Democrats have written section 429 to say "forget all the laws; forget public comment from the American people. We don't have to follow the laws. Just wipe these legal rules off the books that put jobs and our economy at risk."

Mr. Speaker, I want to make note that last night the junior Democrat Senator from Alaska wrote to the Senate Democrat leadership expressing his deep concern and objections to this provision, the harm it could do to economic activity and that it should be removed from this legislation. That's exactly what we should be doing here today. And I ask my colleagues to support that action.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I strongly oppose this measure, and I urge my colleagues to open up the omnibus appropriations bill to amendment.

U.S. SENATE,

Washington, DC, February 24, 2009.

Hon. DANIEL INOUE,

Chairman, Senate Appropriations Committee,
U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN INOUE: I write to express my serious concern over Section 429 of the just-released House version of the Fiscal Year (FY) 2009 Omnibus Appropriations Bill, H.R. 1005, now being considered in the House of Representatives. This section, which was included in the bill without any advance notice, would provide significant new authority to the Secretaries of Commerce and Interior to potentially overturn two of the regulations the Bush Administration adopted under the Endangered Species Act. One of the rules is the Polar Bear Special 4(d) Rule, which has provided some much-needed legal certainty to the application of the Endangered Species Act to the North Slope of Alaska. The Secretary of the Interior would have 60 days from the date of enactment of the Omnibus Bill to withdraw or "reissue" the Special Rule for the polar bear issued on December 10, 2008.

The language of Section 429 is attached. If Section 429 is enacted as is, the Secretary would not have to comply with any statutory or regulatory provision that would normally affect such an action, including public notice or comments or consultation requirements. Significantly, Section 429 also authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to "reissue" the 4(d) Rule for the Polar Bear. It is unclear what actions the Secretary may take in reissuing the rule. While it is possible that the Secretary would only be authorized to reissue the Special 4(d) Rule as it was previously published, under an alternative interpretation, the Secretary may be able to issue a revised rule, with major changes, without having to comply with the typical procedural requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act or the Endangered Species Act. The existing legislative history of the Omnibus Bill does not explain how Congress intends the term "reissue" to be interpreted. This lack of clarity will only cause more legal uncertainty, in an area of law where litigation already is rampant. Activities of numerous businesses operating in Alaska, and of the Inupiat people of the North Slope, will be caught in this void.

Additionally, there would be no "incidental take" protection if Section 429 is enacted and the polar bear 4(d) Rule is withdrawn, without a similar Rule in its place. Should the Secretary decide to withdraw the 4(d) Rule under Section 429, the polar bear would remain listed as a threatened species under the Endangered Species Act. Under the Department of the Interior's regulations, the full range of Section 9 prohibitions apply to all threatened species unless a species is subject to its own Section 4(d) rule. As such, the activities currently covered, and protected, by the 4(d) Rule would be at risk for incurring liability under the Endangered Species Act, should a take of a polar bear occur. This liability would extend even to minor, incidental impacts on polar bears from otherwise entirely lawful activities. This could endanger the public if a polar bear wanders onto a North Slope playground or village. This liability risk will remain until the Secretary promulgates new Section 4(d) regulations for the polar bear. Under this section, the protections built into the current 4(d) Rule could disappear without a replacement 4(d) Rule in the works.

I see no valid public policy reason to inflict on the people of the North Slope significant legal uncertainty and potential liability under the ESA, by congressionally waiving ordinary public notice and comment requirements that routinely apply in virtually all other settings. The inclusion of Section 429 is particularly disturbing in that it effectively "cherry-picks" and exempts certain regulations and has the effect of depriving the public of due process. Irrespective of whether one agrees or disagrees with the substance of rules adopted by the prior administration, this action sets a bad precedent. If the current administration disagrees with a rule previously adopted, there exists a process by which the rule can be reviewed and the notice and participation rights so citizens respected. Finally, the underlying policy goal at issue here—using the Endangered Species Act to regulate climate change—is far too important a matter to be decided without debate as a non-germane portion of an appropriations bill.

I understand that the House may move to strike Section 429 as an extraneous rider. If the motion to strike is not adopted, I respectfully request your assistance and leadership in seeking to omit the language from a Senate bill, or seeking to have the language omitted from any final House-Senate agreement.

Thank you for your consideration and assistance in this important matter.

Sincerely,

MARK BEGICH,

U.S. Senator.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, before I yield to Mr. OBEY to respond to the last speaker, I would like to express my surprise that he would oppose a bill in which he has 30 earmarks in it.

At this point, I would like to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY).

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to correct one misunderstanding on the endangered species proposal.

All this language does is to give the Secretary, the new Secretary, 60 days to re-examine the rule that was a mid-night change in the rule.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. OBEY. I'd like to finish my statement on this first, if I could.

All this does is give the Secretary 60 days to reconsider the rule and decide whether to go forward or not. This was a rule that was promulgated by the administration as they were going out the door after the election. And I have no idea what I think is the right public policy. I do not have any objection, however, to the new Secretary taking a look at it before he commits the country to a change in direction.

Now I'd be happy to yield.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Two points. The reason this ruling came about was because of the listing of the polar bear and that the Bush administration started this process, which is required by law—

Mr. OBEY. I understand. I only have 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Wisconsin an additional 30 seconds.

Mr. OBEY. I only have 30 seconds.

My point is I understand they began the rule a long time ago, but they did not promulgate it until after the election and all this does—this does not reverse the rule; it simply gives the new administration the latitude to determine whether they should go ahead or not. It leaves the situation in neutral, and I think that's a fair thing to do.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. Sure.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. There's probably some disagreement on the rule. But why not go through the regular process to change the rule? You're doing it without any regular process.

Mr. OBEY. I think the regular process would have been for the administration not to promulgate a new rule after the election when they were no longer accountable.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas, a bright young member of the Republican Conference, JEB HENSARLING.

Mr. HENSARLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, as our countrymen are hurting, as our unemployment news grows grim, what is the answer of the Democrat majority? They have brought us the largest single 1-year increase in the Federal deficit; they have brought us the largest deficit ever, $1.2 trillion, 8.3 percent of our economy; they've brought us the largest government debt ever, a debt that will be passed on to our children and grandchildren. And today they bring the largest regular appropriations process in history to the floor totaling at $1 trillion.

They have achieved, Mr. Speaker, a trifecta of trillions: a trillion dollars to stimulate government, a trillion dollars of Federal deficit, a trillion dollars for a regular appropriations bill.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is going to grow the government 8.3 percent. Washington can grow 8.3 percent, the Federal budget can grow 8.3 percent. But the family budget, which has to pay for the Federal budget, only grew at 1.3 percent last year. So somehow Washington is entitled to almost a six-fold increase in their budget but working families are not?

You know, I don't see it. I don't see it, Mr. Speaker.

Now, something I do see is an old quote from Yogi Berra: "It's déjà vu all over again."

So now I'm seeing $3.13 billion for the 2010 census on top of the billion dollars that was given to the census in the so-called stimulus bill; $1.45 billion for Amtrak on top of the $1.3 billion Amtrak received in the stimulus bill. And the list goes on and on.

Again, Mr. Speaker, this is more legislation designed to stimulate the government and not to stimulate the economy.

Let me give you a quote from one of our Secretaries of Treasury. He said, "We are spending more than we have ever spent before, and it does not work. We have never made good on our promises. After 8 years of this administration, we have just as much in unemployment as when we started, an enormous debt to boot." The Secretary of Treasury was Henry Morgenthau, FDR's Secretary of Treasury. Those words were spoken in 1939.

And now we see the example of Japan. Mr. Speaker, you cannot spend and borrow your way into economic prosperity. They had nothing to show for what they did in Japan. Ten stimulus bills, but no jobs, no economic growth, and the largest per capita debt in the world. We should reject following the Japanese way.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I want to remind the previous speaker and some of my friends on the other side that they have been in charge for 8 years in the White House; 6 of those 8 years they've been in charge of the Congress. They can't blame this on Bill Clinton who, by the way, left the White House with a surplus.

Mr. HENSARLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGOVERN. This is the debt that has been accumulated during the Bush administration. The debt has doubled during this past administration. This is the legacy of their policy.

The election was about change. People have had it. People want investments, not in tax cuts for the wealthy, but they want investments in education—

Mr. HENSARLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGOVERN. No. At this point I will not.

They want investments in transportation, in education, and in the future of this country. But this is what they created. This is undeniable. This is what happened during the Bush years: a doubling of the debt. And that is a legacy that our kids and our grandkids are going to have to pay for.

I give President Obama a great deal of credit in this tough economic crisis to not only understand that we need to invest in our people to help create jobs and to help get this economy back on the right track, but he also said last night very clearly that we are going to be fiscally responsible and we are going to cut the deficit in half in 4 years. That is a benchmark that he will be measured by, and I will tell you that I think that what he said last night was what the American people wanted to hear. It's why he won the election in November.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HENSARLING).

Mr. HENSARLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding once again.

And I was happy to see I could save the gentleman from Massachusetts the trouble of looking into his earmark books, as he will find none for me.

I noticed that the gentleman from Massachusetts didn't deny any of the factual assertions. Since Democrats took control of the Congress, we have the single largest 1-year increase in the deficit. He didn't deny it. Go to CBO. You'll find the fact.

We now have the largest deficit ever since Democrats took control of this Chamber. Go to CBO, you'll find out it's a fact. We have the largest government debt ever under Democrat control of this House. He did not deny the fact. I would also point out—since the gentleman has been in this body for quite some time—that it is Congress, it is Congress that passes budgets, not the White House, as much as he would like to blame all of this on the White House. It is Congress.

And every year I've been here, Mr. Speaker, whenever the Republicans have presented a budget—and I haven't been ecstatic about each and every one—my friends on the other side of the aisle present a budget with even more spending that ultimately leads to higher taxes on struggling families in America. That is the fact.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 seconds.

I just remind the gentleman that the Republicans controlled Congress for 6 of the last 8 years.

I reserve my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I would also remind the gentleman that for 6 of those 8 years, Republicans controlled this House of Representatives, and the economy was great because we didn't try and run the investor out on the terms of what's fair for the American people. Once we had tax increases yelled about every day on this floor of this House of Representatives, the investor got it.

So we've got a lot of fairness under the terms that my friends, the Democrats, wanted. And that is where it's called massive unemployment and economic chaos.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Hamilton, New Jersey (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I submitted two pro-life, pro-child, pro-women amendments to the Rules Committee and asked that they be made in order. Regrettably, both were rejected.

As a direct, absolutely predictable consequence of President Obama's abortion export order a few weeks ago nullifying the Mexico City policy, an Obama action that the Gallup poll found that 58 percent of the people oppose him, 35 percent support him—as a result of that order, there will be significantly more abortions worldwide, more dead babies, and more wounded women.

Now the number of innocent children forced to die from dismemberment, decapitation, or chemical poisoning by abortion will increase significantly mostly in Africa and Latin America.

The pro-abortion organizations who will divvy up the $545 million pot of U.S. taxpayer grant money contained in the bill have made it abundantly clear that they will aggressively promote, lobby, litigate, and perform abortions on demand in developing countries. My amendment would have prevented that.

Flush with U.S. funding, foreign pro-abortion NGOs will be regarded in those countries as an extension of American values and mores. In your name and mine, and in the name of the American people pro-abortion organizations will unleash massive death, pain, sorrow, and destruction on babies, women, and families.

The second amendment, Mr. Speaker, would have preserved the Kemp-Kasten anti-coercion amendment. That amendment, while it's in the bill, is actually gutted by language also in the bill that says that funds made available to the UNFPA shall be made available notwithstanding any other provision of law. So it's gutted. My amendment would strike the notwithstanding language and reiterate the anti-coercion text.

The U.N. Population Fund, Mr. Speaker, has actively supported, co-managed and whitewashed the most pervasive crimes against women in human history, yet the omnibus Appropriations bill gives them $50 million and a slap on the wrist.

China's one-child-per-couple policy relies on pervasive coerced abortion, involuntary sterilization, ruinous fines in the amounts of up to 10 times the salary of both parents, imprisonment, job loss or demotion to achieve its quotas. In China today, with UNFPA enabling acquiescence and facilitation, brothers and sisters are illegal. Illegal kids—siblings! Women are told when and if they can have even the one child permitted by law. Unwed mothers, even if the baby is their first, are forcibly aborted.

Women are severely harmed emotionally, psychologically and physically, yet for the past three decades the UNFPA has been China's chief apologist as well as program trainer, facilitator and funder.

So, Mr. Speaker, how does Congress respond to the UNFPA's unconscionable complicity in China's crimes against Women? Do we demand reform, or the protection of Chinese women and children? Heck no. We gut the anti-coercion law and write a $50 million check to the UNFPA.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday I submitted two pro-life, pro-child, pro-women amendments to the Rules Committee and asked that they be made in order under the pending rule.

Notwithstanding the fact that both the Mexico City Policy amendment and the Kemp-Kasten Anti-Coercion population control amendment have been fundamental foreign policy for the better part of two decades, the Democratic leadership chose to reject both, out of hand, precluding members so much as an up or down vote.

As a direct, absolutely predictable consequence of President Obama's abortion export order a few weeks ago nullifying the Mexico City Policy the number of innocent children who will be forced to die from dismemberment, decapitation, or chemical poisoning by abortion will increase significantly, mostly in Africa and Latin America.

According to a Gallup poll released earlier this month, overturning this pro-life policy was the least popular of the President's actions in his first week in office. In fact 58 percent of those polled opposed overturning the policy and only 35 percent supported funding groups that promote or provide abortion as a method of family planning.

The pro-abortion organizations who will divvy up the $545 million pot of U.S. taxpayer grant money contained in the bill have made it abundantly clear that they will aggressively promote, lobby, litigate and perform abortion on demand in developing countries. My amendment prevents that.

Flush with U.S. funds, foreign pro-abortion NGOs will be almost certainly regarded by people in foreign nations as extensions of American values and mores. Mr. Speaker, in your name and mine and in the name of the American people—pro-abortion organizations will unleash massive death, pain, sorrow and destruction on babies, women and families throughout the world.

President Obama—the Abortion President—has put countless innocent children in harm's way, all while speechifying that he wants to reduce abortion.

And please, let's not kid ourselves any longer. There is nothing whatsoever benign, kind or compassionate about abortion; it is violence against children and wounds women.

The second amendment would have ensured that the Kemp-Kasten anti-coercion proviso in the bill has meaning. On one page of the Omnibus, Kemp-Kasten is seemingly retained intact, only to be completely gutted by text which reads.

Funds appropriated by this act for UNFPA—$50 million—“shall be made available to UNFPA notwithstanding any provision of law

The U.N. Population Fund has actively supported, co-managed, and white-washed the most pervasive crimes against women in human history.

Yet this bill gives them $50 million and a slap on the wrist.

China's one-child-per-couple policy relies on pervasive, coerced abortion, involuntary sterilization, ruinous fines in amounts up to 10 times the salary of both parents, imprisonment, and job loss or demotion to achieve its quotas.

In China today with UNFPA enabling China's barbaric government policy, brothers and sisters are illegal. Imagine, a government so hostile to siblings that it makes them enemies of the state—and dead.

Women are told by Chinese family planning cadres when—and if—they can have even the one child permitted by law.

Unwed mothers—even if the baby is her first—are forcibly aborted. No exception.

Women are severely harmed emotionally, psychologically, and physically. Chinese women are violated by the state. The suicide rate for Chinese women—about 500 a day—far exceeds suicide anywhere else on earth.

Then there are the missing girls—about 100 million—victims of sex selection abortions. This gendercide is a direct result of the China/UNFPA one child policy.

In 2008—the U.S. State Department found once again that the UNFPA violated the anti-coercion provision of Kemp-Kasten and reprogrammed all funding originally earmarked for the UNFPA to other maternal health care or family planning projects.

Yet throughout the past three decades, the U.N. Population Fund has remained China's chief apologist, as well as program trainer, facilitator and funder.

So, finally, Mr. Speaker, how does Congress respond to the UNFPA's unconscionable complicity in China's crimes against women? Do we demand reform and protection of Chinese women and children? Heck no. We gut the anti-coercion law and write a $50 million check to the UNFPA.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY).

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, let me simply point out that our friends in the right-to-life community have made their concerns clear. They have asked this committee to retain virtually all of the limitations on abortions that have been in previous appropriations. The committee has done so in 19 of 20 items. That's a pretty good batting average I would suggest.

The only change that has been made with respect to abortion is the change with respect to the United Nations Population Fund. And here we retained all current law restrictions on family planning funds in China, which means UNFPA programs in China will not be funded. The bill does make some adjustments that allow certain expenditures for maternal health programs, including ensuring safe childbirth and emergency obstetrics care. The new provision does not in any way change current law restrictions on funding of UNFPA contra programs in China. I personally detest the Chinese programs and I agree with the gentleman's observations about the Chinese programs, but the adjustments simply allow this agency to proceed in 100 other countries.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, at this time, I would like to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK).

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Chairman, as a Republican moderate, I rise in support of the rule, but against the bill that it governs.

This rule would deny a pay raise to the Congress, and since Americans are not getting a raise, neither should we. But the ominous appropriations bill underlying this legislation is not responsible. It contains 9,000 earmarks, with no irony in the very same week as the Fiscal Responsibility Summit.

The earmarks in support of projects come from Republicans and Democrats, but none of them face the time that we see. Earmarks, remember, are sole-source Federal grants given without competition, many for clients of entities who paid lobbyists to reach into our Treasury.

Now, one set of earmarks in this legislation deserves particular scrutiny. The bill contains no less than a dozen earmarks for the clients of Paul Magliochetti and Associates, known as PMA. Agents from the FBI raided PMA 3 months ago, and yet I have seen, coming from Illinois, the signs of a Federal criminal investigation and know what they look like. And the signs are all there now that the Justice Department is moving to soon indict the leaders of PMA, but stunningly, this House is ready to approve no less than 12 PMA client earmarks in this bill, reaching into the taxpayers' Treasury for $8.7 million. It is simply not responsible to allow a soon to be criminally indicted lobbying firm to win funding—all borrowed money—in this bill.

This bill also dramatically accelerates spending by the Federal Government. We have approved a $1 trillion stimulus bill; this is a $410 billion omnibus appropriation; and then we will take up a supplemental appropriation bill—all borrowed money. The legislation contains no analysis of the borrowing required to support this spending.

The Bureau of the Public Debt reports that we will have to borrow $150 billion a week to support this spending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SESSIONS. I give the gentleman an additional minute.

Mr. KIRK. We will have to borrow an additional $150 billion a week, the Bureau of Public Debt reports, to support this spending.

Now, the number of lenders to the United States Government used to total 45; they are now less than 17. And our top lender is China, its government and central bank, that just announced that its lending to the United States will drop from $450 billion last year to just $150 billion this year. Now, they've already lent us $1 trillion, and they're worried that we can't repay. Would you blame them?

So I would hope, at a minimum, that when the conference meets on this legislation we delete the criminal earmarks, the 12 PMA earmarks, in conference. These leaders from PMA are likely going to jail, and their work should go unrewarded from our Treasury.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, let me just say I am grateful to the gentleman for supporting the rule. I'm glad he agrees with us that in this tough economic time we should not go forward with a pay raise for Members of Congress. But I would simply point out that passing the rule in and of itself doesn't deny Members a pay raise. You need to pass the rule and pass the bill; otherwise, it doesn't happen. So I would urge him maybe to rethink his position.

At this point, I would like to yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS).

Ms. WATERS. I would like to thank the chairman and subcommittee chairman on the Appropriations Committee for doing such a great job crafting this legislation.

Last night, President Obama said that a budget should be more than just a list of programs and dollar amounts, it's a document that should reflect our values as a Congress.

I'm proud to support this rule and this omnibus bill as a reflection of my values. Allow me to briefly mention some of the programs that I'm proud to have worked with my colleagues to fund.

I'm very pleased that we have additional money in here for public housing capital funds. We have many of our large public housing projects that are in great disrepair, and to have just a decent quality of life we needed to expand support for these public housing projects. There is money for section 8 tenant-based vouchers, money for section 8 project-based vouchers, and then of course education and training.

We have my beloved Head Start program. That is going to ensure that 900,000 low-income children have access to high-quality preschool services, title I grants for low-income children, and money for dislocated workers.

In health, we're going to give additional support to community health centers, health professions training, and Missing Alzheimer's Disease Patient Alert Program; and of course some assistance in international aid for HIV and AIDS; and a little money for Haiti—that's the poorest country in the Western Hemisphere.

So I am very, very proud of this legislation, particularly in this time of economic crisis. It's vital that we continue to invest in our economy to keep our country strong.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, at this time, I would like to yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Augusta, Georgia, Dr. PAUL BROUN.

Mr. BROUN of Georgia. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

This rule is totally unfair, and it is a slap in the face to the American family. We are struggling all across America to try to make ends meet, but what are we doing here in Congress? We're growing the size of the Federal Government. The things that are included in this grows every one of these appropriations in whole by almost 8.5 percent, but the American public's budget isn't growing that much.

I presented an amendment to this huge abomination here that would have cut discretionary spending—not military spending, not veteran spending, but discretionary spending—by 10 percent. My amendment was not held in order. I was trying to help the American people, but we're having this forced down our throats. This is just another continued rolling of a steam roll of socialism down the throats of the American people and it's going to destroy our economy.

Just as an example of how grossly growing the Federal Government is, Labor HHS, with what is in this bill as well as what was in the nonstimulus bill just a couple of weeks ago, is growing by 91 percent just for that one department. Labor HHS approps is growing 91 percent. This is totally intolerable.

Just last night, the President stood right there and said he wanted to cut the deficit in half by the end of his 4-year term. We're not cutting the deficit, we're growing government, and it's going to increase the Federal debt. This is intolerable, and this rule should be rejected.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, at this time, I would like to yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Allentown, Pennsylvania.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I just rise today to express my disappointment with the fact that we are operating under a closed rule. I appreciate the fact that we are going to eliminate the pay raise, I think that's appropriate, and I commend everybody involved with that. We should not be getting a raise at a time like this.

But ordinarily we operate under what's called an open rule so that we have the opportunity to offer amendments to appropriations measures, that is our custom. And I'm very disappointed that we're not allowed to do that.

We all talk about bipartisanship, as we should, and we should try to work for bipartisan legislation. In fact, the President just the other day said something to the effect that the majority needs to be inclusive and the minority needs to be constructive. I agree. And in that spirit, I offered an amendment to the Rules Committee yesterday that would have limited the increase in spending in this legislation to the rate of inflation at 3.8 percent. It was rejected on a party line vote. I think it would have been most appropriate. Again, that amendment was substantive, it was constructive, and would have benefited the American taxpayer.

I understand that we have an obligation to govern, that we must pass appropriations bills to fund the government; that is important and that's something we must do. But the fact that we're operating under this closed rule process, though, again, shuts so many people out of the process. It is unfair, it's unreasonable, it is not bipartisan, and I think we should heed President Obama's voice, that the minority should be constructive and the majority should be inclusive. And that is not what is occurring with respect to this Omnibus Appropriations Act.

I am disappointed. And like others, I intend to vote for the rule because it will eliminate the pay raise, so that's a good thing; but again, we need to get back to regular order.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman, Mr. FLAKE, had it right this morning when he said this bill is heavy, and it is. And this is the bill that we're getting ready to pass, hundreds of billions of more dollars that will be taken from the American people that we're borrowing this money.

Just last week, we passed a bill that was twice this size, all borrowed money. This is a bill that, by and large, was put together last June and ready to go. We are now 5 full months through the fiscal year, and yet we decided to go ahead and do the exact same bill in the remaining 7 months; 8 percent increase if we had 12 months, now we've got 7 months left. All borrowed time, all borrowed money off of a system that now, months later, is under greater distress.

The American family, the American taxpayer, American business, even investors to this great country, like China—as we've heard the gentleman, Mr. KIRK, talk about—the investors, people who will pay for this debt, are growing weary of bigger and bigger government, of more and more spending.

And I do recognize that we disagree with each other on the floor based upon party lines, but at some point there has to be a reality check. And the reality check is that, since we decided to wait almost half a year, why not cut it in half? Makes sense to me. Perhaps that's common sense; perhaps it's just political shenanigans. But, Mr. Speaker, here we are today with 7 months remaining and we're going to cram down an 8.5 percent increase.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS).

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Omnibus Appropriations Act and the rule currently being debated in the House.

Division E of this bill provides $27.6 billion for programs under the jurisdiction of the Interior and Environment Subcommittee. This is a modest increase of about 4½ percent over the 2008 funding level. These funds are critically needed to support the core activities of agencies which serve every American family and which benefit the taxpayers of this country. These agencies include the National Park Service, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Refuge System, and the National Forest System. These land management agencies manage more than 600 million acres of publicly owned land and host more than 200 million visitors every year.

The bill also funds the Indian Health Service and the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which provide education, law enforcement, and health services for 4 million Native Americans. It includes the money to support the staff of the Department of the Interior, which develops the offshore and land-based energy resources of this country. These energy-related programs generate over $20 billion of revenue for the Federal Treasury every year. It includes money for the EPA to support environmental protection activities in every congressional district affecting every single American family.

Mr. Speaker, I want to specifically address the question raised earlier as to why we need this omnibus money when we have just provided $11 billion for the agencies in the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act signed last week. The basic answer is the stimulus legislation provides funding for infrastructure projects at these agencies, in particular funding to address the longstanding and well-documented maintenance backlogs. The omnibus bill we are considering today supports the operational costs of these agencies.

The recovery bill pays to repair Indian schools. This bill pays for the teachers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MCGOVERN. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. DICKS. The recovery provides funds to fix dilapidated Indian hospitals and clinics and allows purchases of critically needed medical equipment. The omnibus bill pays for the doctors, dentists, and nurses.

The recovery bill will improve the roads, bridges, trails, and visitor services facilities of our parks, refuges, and forests. The omnibus bill pays for the park rangers who provide visitor services and for the law enforcement rangers who protect those visitors.

The recovery bill will repair, rehabilitate, and build new water and sewer systems in over 500 communities. The omnibus bill includes funding to support efforts to protect public health by enforcing laws and regulation to ensure our air is fresh, our water is safe, and that our families are not exposed to dangerous toxins.

I want to commend Chairman OBEY for bringing this bill badly needed by the American people. These are important programs, and I appreciate his leadership on this bill and the staff of the committee as well.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Omnibus Appropriations Act currently being debated in the House.

Division E of this bill provides $27.6 billion for programs under the jurisdiction of the Interior and Environment Subcommittee. This is a modest increase of about 4½ percent over the 2008 funding level. These funds are critically needed to support the core activities of agencies which serve every American family and which benefit the taxpayers of this country. These agencies include the National Park Service, the U.S. Wildlife Refuge System, and the National Forest system. These land management agencies manage more than 600 million acres of publicly owned land and host more than 200 million visitors every year. The bill also funds the Indian Health Service and the Bureau of Indian Affairs which provide education, law enforcement, and health services for 4 million Native Americans. It includes the money to support the staff of the Department of the Interior which develops the offshore and land-based energy resources of this country. These energy related programs generate over $20 billion of revenue for the Federal treasury every year. It includes money for the EPA to support environmental protection activities in every congressional district affecting every single American family.

Mr. Speaker, I want to specifically address the question raised earlier as to why we need this Omnibus bill when we have just provided $11 billion for these agencies in the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act signed last week. The basic answer is that the stimulus legislation provides funding for infrastructure projects at these agencies, in particular funding to address the long-standing and well documented maintenance backlogs. The Omnibus bill we are considering today supports the operational costs of these agencies.

The Recovery bill pays to repair Indian schools. This bill pays for the teachers.

The Recovery provides funds to fix dilapidated Indian hospitals and clinics and allow purchase of critically needed medical equipment. The Omnibus pays for the doctors, dentists, and nurses.

The Recovery bill will improve the roads, bridges, trails, and visitor services facilities of our parks, refuges, and forests. The Omnibus bill pays for the park rangers who provide visitor services and for the law enforcement rangers who protect those visitors.

The Recovery bill will repair, rehabilitate and build new water and sewer systems in over 500 communities. The Omnibus bill includes funding to support efforts to protect public health by enforcing laws and regulation to ensure our air is fresh, our water is safe, and that our families are not exposed to dangerous toxic wastes.

The Recovery bill will pay to improve border security by installing surveillance equipment and allowing purchase of better equipment for law enforcement personnel. But it is the Omnibus bill which pays for the refuge and park personnel who patrol the border areas which are overwhelmed by drug dealers and undocumented aliens. I toured this area last weekend on a Committee field visit and I can tell you these brave rangers and other law enforcement personnel face danger every day and desperately need the funding in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, a full-year Continuing Resolution will not adequately fund the operational costs of these agencies. Fixed costs average a little over 5 percent this year. If Congress simply extends the Continuing Resolution, agencies already suffering serious staffing shortfalls will have to further reduce staff. The Park Service will lose $161 million. The wildlife refuges will lose $29 million. The Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Indian Health Service will lose $320 million. These cuts will have very serious consequences.

Let me give one very straightforward example of the impact of a full year Continuing Resolution. The Indian Health Service estimates that if they are forced to operate for the rest of the year under the Continuing Resolution that they will provide 2,800 fewer hospital admissions and 400,000 fewer outpatient visits. Screening for diabetes, cancer and other life threatening diseases will also be significantly reduced. These are very serious consequences.

Mr. Speaker, this bill we are considering today includes a very modest increase of 4.8

percent over the 2008 level for Interior and Environment programs. The recommendations have been developed through a fully bipartisan process. I urge adoption of the bill.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, last night here in the well, the President said that there were no pork barrel projects in this bill, and now we find out there are over 9,000 pork barrel projects. Some people in the other Chamber said that the American people don't care about those pork barrel projects. I think they do.

And I think the American people care about our kids. We are stealing from our children and future generations. And let me just tell you why I say that.

We spent $700 billion in the TARP bill. We don't even know where half of that money went, $350 billion. We spent $14 billion on the auto industry. That's just the beginning. And there wasn't even a plan. If there had been a plan, it would have been a different situation. We spent $787 billion plus interest, which is going to take it over $1 trillion, on the stimulus bill, and we don't know if that's going to work. And we have got these 9,000 pork barrel projects that are in this bill, which is $408 billion. You add all that up plus the national health care, which the President said we are going to have to have here very quickly, and you don't have any idea how much money we're talking about. Mr. Geithner said $2 trillion is going to go in to help bail out the financial institutions. You add all of that up and it is an astronomical amount of printing of money and borrowing of money, and we don't have it. And we're borrowing from our kids and future generations.

And then on top of that, the President said he was going to cut the deficit in half in 4 years. That is not possible. It is just not possible. And I just hope the American people are paying attention, Mr. Speaker, because we're playing with funny money in this place and we're hurting the future generations of this country.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER).

Mr. BLUMENAUER. I appreciate the gentleman's courtesy.

Listening to my friend from Indiana talking about funny money and fiscal responsibility, well, you know, we didn't hear that from you when those on the other side ran the economy into the ditch for the last 8 years, turning a $5 trillion surplus into a massive budget deficit. If he would have listened to the President last night, he would have heard that the President said the economic recovery package had no earmarks. Now, even though this Omnibus has one-fourth of the earmarks that the previous Republican crew had when they ran the place, the President wasn't talking about today's bill. He was talking about the economic stimulus.

I appreciate the hard work of the committee in bringing this forward. As we know, this work was largely done last year but we had a President that was running out the clock. He wouldn't work with the committee to deal with then what our established budget resolution was. He wanted more Draconian cuts. The committee wisely sidestepped that, moved forward with a new Congress and a new administration. This $410 billion package works in harmony with the economic recovery package, and I am pleased that it refocuses on the pieces that matter.

I have got a little provision in here that makes a difference for my community, a broadly supported effort for $45 million to revitalize our community with a Portland streetcar, something that's gaining attention across the country. People look at this as an opportunity to rebuild and renew, create jobs, revitalize community. It also contains important funding provisions for Public Broadcasting that will allow our hometowns to continue to invest in quality, commercial-free, educational, and cultural programming. It continues the investment in renewable energy.

I would like to conclude by paying special tribute to the committee and especially Chairwoman LOWEY for her success in raising the profile and investment in international clean water and sanitation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McGOVERN. I yield the gentleman 30 seconds.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, we came together with bipartisan legislation in 2005, the Water for the Poor Act, but Congress didn't put any significant money in it. There was less than $10 million for all of Sub-Saharan Africa. This year there is $300 million to implement the Water for the Poor Act, and a significant investment in Sub-Saharan Africa. It's going to mean that hundreds of thousands of lives are going to be saved and the United States is going to be regarded differently around the world.

Simple, common sense, should have been done years ago, is going to be done now, and I appreciate the committee's hard work.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The bill that we are talking about, again, is a large bill, $400 billion worth of spending, very few committee mark-ups, committee hearings. We heard that they could not negotiate with the President because they didn't want to have to make tough decisions to fit within a box the package that would be, I think, best for the American people, $400 billion more worth of spending.

Borrowed money is difficult for the United States, and it's my hope that sometime during this process that my friends the Democrats are going through that they will recognize that borrowing money is a sad way to run the business.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Let me begin by thanking Chairman OBEY and the members of the Appropriations Committee on both sides of the aisle and their staff for their tireless efforts in trying to put together a bill that will help the American people.

I urge my colleagues to support the underlying bill. This is, as I said earlier, a completion of last year's work. Unfortunately, the White House refused to negotiate with the Congress. They showed an incredible amount of disrespect and indifference to what congressional leaders of both parties had to say, and it was their way or the highway, and so here we are. We're trying to wrap up last year's work in a way that will help the American people.

My colleague from Texas talks about that we should have a freeze on all spending. Well, given this economy, that kind of a policy would leave a lot of people in the cold. It will take some government investment to get us out of this ditch that we're in. And no matter how you want to look at it, the graphs and the charts are all the same, that these last 8 years this administration's policies, with the help of a lot of my friends on the other side of the aisle when they were in charge of Congress, have driven this economy into a ditch, and we need to get out of this ditch.

Mr. Speaker, I should also tell my colleagues that this rule also prevents Members of Congress from receiving a pay raise, and every Member of this House has the opportunity to vote up or down on this rule. And a vote against this rule and I would say a vote against the bill is a vote for the congressional pay raise. So if you have said publicly that you oppose the congressional pay raise, that you would vote against an increase in your salary if you could, well, here's your chance. If you vote "no" on the rule and you vote "no" on the underlying bill, then you are voting to increase your pay. I think during these difficult economic times, that's the least this Congress can do, and I would urge a "yes" vote on the previous question and on the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 9 of rule XX, the Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the minimum time for any electronic vote on the question of adoption of the resolution.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 393, nays 25, not voting 13, as follows:

(1) Firearm traces are designed to assist law enforcement authorities in conducting investigations by tracking the sale and possession of specific firearms. Law enforcement agencies may request firearms traces for any reason, and those reasons are not necessarily reported to the Federal Government. Not all firearms used in crime are traced and not all firearms traced are used in crime.

(2) Firearms selected for tracing are not chosen for purposes of determining which types, makes, or models of firearms are used for illicit purposes. The firearms selected do not constitute a random sample and should not be considered representative of the larger universe of all firearms used by criminals, or any subset of that universe. Firearms are normally traced to the first retail seller, and sources reported for firearms traced do not necessarily represent the sources or methods by which firearms in general are acquired for use in crime.

(2) sensitive personal information for any individual, the public access to which could be used to commit identity theft or for other inappropriate or unlawful purposes.

(c) A grant or contract funded by amounts appropriated by this Act may not be used for the purpose of defraying the costs of a banquet or conference that is not directly and programmatically related to the purpose for which the grant or contract was awarded, such as a banquet or conference held in connection with planning, training, assessment, review, or other routine purposes related to a project funded by the grant or contract.

(b) The foregoing exemption from obtaining an export license—

(1) does not exempt an exporter from filing any Shipper's Export Declaration or notification letter required by law, or from being otherwise eligible under the laws of the United States to possess, ship, transport, or export the articles enumerated in subsection (a); and

(2) does not permit the export without a license of—

(A) fully automatic firearms and components and parts for such firearms, other than for end use by the Federal Government, or a Provincial or Municipal Government of Canada;

(B) barrels, cylinders, receivers (frames) or complete breech mechanisms for any firearm listed in Category I, other than for end use by the Federal Government, or a Provincial or Municipal Government of Canada; or

(C) articles for export from Canada to another foreign destination.

(c) In accordance with this section, the District Directors of Customs and postmasters shall permit the permanent or temporary export without a license of any unclassified articles specified in subsection (a) to Canada for end use in Canada or return to the United States, or temporary import of Canadian-origin items from Canada for end use in the United States or return to Canada for a Canadian citizen.

(d) The President may require export licenses under this section on a temporary basis if the President determines, upon publication first in the Federal Register, that the Government of Canada has implemented or maintained inadequate import controls for the articles specified in subsection (a), such that a significant diversion of such articles has and continues to take place for use in international terrorism or in the escalation of a conflict in another nation. The President shall terminate the requirements of a license when reasons for the temporary requirements have ceased.

SEC. 521. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States receiving appropriated funds under this Act or any other Act shall obligate or expend in any way such funds to pay administrative expenses or the compensation of any officer or employee of the United States to deny any application submitted pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2778(b)(1)(B) and qualified pursuant to 27 CFR section 478.112 or .113, for a permit to import United States origin "curios or relics" firearms, parts, or ammunition.

SEC. 522. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used to include in any new bilateral or multilateral trade agreement the text of—

(1) paragraph 2 of article 16.7 of the United States-Singapore Free Trade Agreement;

(2) paragraph 4 of article 17.9 of the United States-Australia Free Trade Agreement; or

(3) paragraph 4 of article 15.9 of the United States-Morocco Free Trade Agreement.

SEC. 525. Funds appropriated by this Act, or made available by the transfer of funds in this Act, for intelligence or intelligence related activities are deemed to be specifically authorized by the Congress for purposes of section 504 of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 414) during fiscal year 2009 until the enactment of the Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 2009.

SEC. 527. None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by this Act may be used to enter into a contract in an amount greater than $5,000,000 or to award a grant in excess of such amount unless the prospective contractor or grantee certifies in writing to the agency awarding the contract or grant that, to the best of its knowledge and belief, the contractor or grantee has filed all Federal tax returns required during the three years preceding the certification, has not been convicted of a criminal offense under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, and has not, more than 90 days prior to certification, been notified of any unpaid Federal tax assessment for which the liability remains unsatisfied, unless the assessment is the sub-
